LEADERS AGREE CONSTITUTION IS SUPREME ISSUE

Both Candidates So Recognize It.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., July 25.—[Special.]—The constitution has become the paramount issue in the 1936 presidential election.

It is so recognized by Gov. Landon in his acceptance speech in which he pronounced the proposals to change our form of government either with or without changing our constitution "the most important question now before us."

It has been made the paramount issue by the revealed intentions of President Roosevelt and his associated New Dealers, if returned to power, to circumvent the Supreme court's invalidation of the NRA, the AAA and the Guffey coal control and to reëstablish a collectivist economy with all occupational activities regimented by the central government at Washington.

Struggle for Court Control.

As a result of the tactics adopted by the New Dealers the election has resolved itself into a struggle for control of the Supreme court, the complexion of which may be greatly changed in the next four years by the death or retirement of justices, a majority of whom are over 70 years old.

If President Roosevelt should be reëlected he would appoint to such vacancies justices who presumably would interpret the constitution to authorize the radical centralization of government aimed at by the New Dealers.

If Gov. Landon should be elected he would appoint to such vacancies justices who presumably would sustain the present construction of the constitution by the Supreme court which holds the New Deal an invasion of the states.

Landon Reveals Views.

"The Republican party," said Gov. Landon, "does not believe that the people wish to abandon the American form of government. We propose to maintain the constitutional balance of power between the states and the federal government."

If Mr. Roosevelt should fail to accomplish his purpose through a broader interpretation of the constitution he would resort to one of the methods he mentioned in his famous "horse and buggy" comment on the Supreme court's decision invalidating the NRA. He suggested the court might be circumvented by an amendment to the constitution or otherwise. The amendment of the constitution is the alternative of last resort designated by the Democratic platform.

The other alternative vaguely indicated by Mr. Roosevelt in the "horse and buggy" interview is legislation depriving the Supreme court of the power to invalidate legislation by congress. A New Deal congress then would be at liberty to enact any laws and make them stick. There are about 25 bills proposed by New Dealers to curb the Supreme court now pending in congress.

Change Only by Amendment.

Gov. Landon says that it is not his belief "that the constitution is above change," but such change should be effected by amendment of the constitution, "openly after full and free discussion and after full opportunity for the people to express their will."

Changing the form of government by other means Gov. Landon denounces as usurpation.

"For any official or branch or government to attempt such a change without authority from the people," he said, "is to do an unwaranted and illegal act. It is a substitution of personal for constitutional government."

That the New Dealers expect to accomplish in one way or another the increased centralization of government they aim at during the next four years, if Mr. Roosevelt should be reëlected, has been abundantly demonstrated of late. At present they are conspicuously stressing the possibilities of the validation of the New Deal through a broader construction of the constitution which would recognize a greater scope of implied powers of the federal government.

Applauds Jefferson's Action.

Mr. Roosevelt in his Little Rock speech last month applauded Thomas Jefferson for ignoring advice that his purchase of Louisiana territory lacked specific constitutional authority and for proceeding on the theory that there were "certain inherent qua

WORLD'S WHEAT SHORT; IMPORTS FORCED ON U. S.

New Deal Control of Crops Goes Awry.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

The world is short more than half a billion bushels of wheat. Practically every major wheat belt in the world, including that in the United States, produced less than a normal crop this year. There will not be enough wheat thrashed this year to provide consumers with their normal ration of bread. Figures show that if consumers eat their usual amount of bread and cereal during the next twelve months there would not be a single bushel left for a "nest egg" to carry over into next year.

Wheat growers of the United States are today confronted with an outstanding object lesson in the inability of politica' planners to outline a production program for them to follow.

Tables Turned on U. S.

There is a stronger demand for wheat now than at any time during the last five or six years. Had there been no government interference with nature during the last three years farmers would have more wheat for sale today.

Instead, this nation, once one of the largest wheat exporting countries in the world, will not only be forced to scrape the bins to feed its own people but must continue to bring in foreign grown wheat. Approximately 40 million bushels of wheat, including flour, have been imported into this country during the last year.

In the 1934-'35 crop year the United States, for the first time since our records were started in 1866, became a net importer of wheat. Today this country is the second largest importer of wheat, exceeded only by Great Britain including North Ireland.

Under a Different Régime.

Ten years ago it was a different story. For example, in the 1924-'25 marketing year United States farmers sold 259 million bushels of wheat abroad, exceeding the exports of any other country in the world.

Current production of wheat, totaling 4,639,726,000 bushels, plus 635,000,000 bushels left on hands, gives the world an aggregate supply of only 5,274,726,000 bushels. Last year the world consumed 5,289,800,000 bushels.

This year's supply including the current crop and the carryover from last year, lacks 15 million bushels of being as much as was consumed. This shortage, plus a normal carryover of about 550 million bushels, leaves the world 565 million bushels short of its normal needs for next year.

Big Producers All Considered.

In these calculations Russian and Chinese wheat figures—usually left out of most summaries—are included. Computations show, however, that the production and consumption of wheat in these two countries are about equal this year.

Farmers and consumers in the United States will be among the victims hardest hit by the world wheat shortage. During the five year period from 1929 to 1933, this country produced more than 15 per cent of all the wheat grown, raising more than any other nation on the globe with the possible exception of Russia.

Figures Show the Situation.

Drouth and other production hazards cannot be predicted. Today American farmers are thrashing a wheat crop—grown on a reduced acreage—estimated to be approximately 638 million bushels. This is 145,773,000 bushels less than the five year average from 1929 to 1933. The normal American consumption is about 650 million bushels annually. The usual carryover is in the neighborhood of 125 to 150 million bushels.

It will be necessary for the United States to bring hard wheat in from Canada to blend with soft wheat during the next year, paying 42 cents a bushel duty on all millable imported wheat.

Crop Short in Dominion.

Unfortunately Canada's wheat supply is short, too. The dominion carryover of 125 million bushels from last year is about double the normal supply left at the end of each twelve months. But the Canadian crop this year is estimated at only 250 million bushels. The five year average exceeds 354 million bushels. Canada's total supply, including carryover, will be only 375 million bushels.

It is the opinion of Nat C. Murray, Chicago authority on crop statistics,

Kill 180 Dogs in City's Drive to Halt Rabies

More than 180 stray dogs were killed yesterday at the city pound in a move by officials to curb the spread of rabies. An amendment to the city ordinance was passed last Wednesday by the city council making possible the destruction of unclaimed strays after they have been impounded 24 hours. Previously the law required them to be kept five days.

Despite the large number of strays put to death by gas in the pound's execution chamber, the facilities of the municipal dog shelter still were taxed as employés rounded up hundreds more of stray dogs. Forty WPA carpenters were building 300 new cages to impound for observation dogs which have bitten persons.

50,000 Strays Roaming City.

Dr. H. N. Bundesen, president of the city health board, estimated that 50,000 stray dogs are roaming the city. He said the number of persons bitten is the highest on record and that examination of dogs disclosed an alarming percentage of rabies. Three persons have died from rabies since the first of the year, two of them within the last month.

Yesterday the health department reported that 97 persons were bitten in the 24 hour period ending at 8 a. m. About 10 persons began taking anti-rabies vaccine.

Dr. Bundesen explained that when a dog bite is reported to the health department the biting dog, if it can be found, is placed under observation. If it is found to have rabies the bitten person is notified to begin taking Pasteur treatments. If the victim was bitten on the head, neck, or shoulders, a series of 21 injections will be given within 14 days.

Treatments as a Precaution.

In cases where the person bitten does not know the identity of the dog, or if the dog was a stray, anti-rabies treatments are given as a matter of precaution.

Two firemen of engine company 72, 7981 South Chicago avenue, were inoculated yesterday against rabies by Dr. Harold P. Sullivan at St. Anthony's hospital. Capt. Carl Meyer and Firemen Clarence Eklund were treated after the firehouse mascot died of rabies on Friday. They had not been bitten, but it was feared their contact with the dog might have exposed them to rabies.

North side policemen searched yesterday for several children said to have been bitten by a mad dog in Grace street near Sheridan road. A passing motorist reported the matter to Lincoln Park Policeman John Probst, who found the dog in front of 830 Lakeside place and shot it. The head was sent to the health department where tests showed the dog was infected with rabies.

Funeral services were held yesterday at St. Rita's church, 63d street and Washtenaw avenue, for Anthony Scharf, 4 years old, who died from rabies last Wednesday. Six of his playmates acted as pallbearers. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery. It was the death of the Scharf child which focused attention upon the prevalence of rabies in Chicago.

SIR ARTHUR KEITH, SCIENTIST, CLAIMS NATIONS MAKE RACES

[Copyright: 1936: By the New York Times.]

LONDON, July 25.—Sir Arthur Keith, whose views on the question of race grow more controversial with his advancing years, tonight delivered the presidential address to the British Speleological association at Buxton, Cheshire.

To scientists who have specialized in the study of caves and who have often discovered human remains in the course of their work, Sir Arthur outlined what he described as a new theory of the origin of modern races of mankind. Sir Arthur is almost the only outstanding scientist in Britain who agrees with the Nazi ideas of race purity and has not hesitated to say so.

Only this week, writing in the Times of London, he asserted:

"A nation is an evolutionary cradle. It is an incipient race. First, the difference between one nation and another may be wholly psychological, but let this psychological isolation hold throughout the centuries and differences in body as well as mind will follow."

DOG TURNS ON POLICE PURSUER AND 'SHOOTS' HIM

Detroit, Mich., July 25.—(AP)—Patrolman William Huey answered a hurry call that a dog, apparently mad, was at large. With a lasso in one hand and his revolver in the other, he pursued the animal.

He fired, and missed. The dog turned, grabbed the lasso in its teeth, and pulled. Huey tripped and fell. His revolver was discharged and the bullet struck him in the right foot.

Huey went to the hospital. The dog got away.

Falls to Death as Flyer Tries to Dodge Bird

New York, July 25.—(AP)—A naval reserve aviation mechanic was thrown to his death in the Atlantic ocean today, the U. S. N. Third district headquarters said tonight, when the pilot of a plane in which the mechanic was riding attempted to dodge a bird.

The jerking of the plane, it was explained, tossed Samuel H. Gladstone, naval reserve first class seaman, and his seat out of the ship at a height of about 1,000 feet.

Bathers Watch Plunge.

Horrified bathers on the New Jersey coast saw Gladstone attempting to open his parachute as he plunged into the sea about one-quarter of a mile southeast of the Lavallette coast guard station.

The plane struck the bird despite the efforts of the pilot, Lieut. Edward G. Mason, to miss it. At the same moment he saw his companion hurtling through the air and flew over the coast guard station to attract attention of the crew there.

Boat Picks Up Body.

Two coast guardsmen set out in a surf boat, recovering the body, which they described in a message to coast guard headquarters here as "badly smashed."

The plane had taken off from Floyd Bennett airport, Long Island, where a naval reserve flying unit is based, and was heading back there after a flight over the New Jersey coast.

It was said at the naval headquarters an investigation would be held to determine why Gladstone's seat in the plane was loose. Both the pilot and Gladstone were attached to the Wright aeronautical plant, Peterborough Airport, N. J.

REPORT PLANE FALLS IN LAKE; SEARCH FUTILE

South Haven, Mich., July 25.—(AP)—The South Haven lightship of the coast guard was searching an area of Lake Michigan about seven miles off shore tonight after the headquarters here received a report that an airplane had been seen falling in the water before dark.

Julius Wheeler, boatswain mate first class, in charge of the station, was leading the search.

Albert Bates, a surfman at the station, said a woman had telephoned the station at 6:35 p. m. saying that she had seen the plane fall into the water. She said she was watching it from the shore.

LOOT AND BURN CITY OF MALAGA; PRIESTS SHOT?

GIBRALTAR, July 25.—(AP)—Refugees arriving here tonight aboard the British destroyer Brazen brought reports that 2,500 bodies were lying in the streets of Malaga, southern Spanish city.

One of the refugees said 50 Catholic priests had been placed together in a public square and shot down with a machine gun.

Foreigners at Malaga were not injured, the refugees said, but the city was "unrecognizable." They said clubs and homes of Monarchists and Fascists were destroyed and more than 200 buildings were burned. Armed youths, the fugitives declared, were roaming the streets and frequent killings were occurring.

Eleanor Holm Hits Back at Her Accusers

BERLIN, July 25.—(AP)—Eleanor Holm Jarrett heard her Olympic swimming career ended today and then countered with a bitter broadside at the American Olympic committee.

Charges of misconduct on board the S. S. Manhattan en route to Berlin, which led to her dismissal from the United States team, were hurled back at officials by the comely 22 year old record holder.

Militantly defending her own behavior, Mrs. Jarrett charged officials "disgraced" and "misconducted" themselves on shipboard and that "at least" 100 other athletes were guilty of rule infractions during the nine day ocean voyage.

She loosed her attack, in a 700 word prepared statement, after her last hope of reinstatement vanished when her name formally was withdrawn from the 100 meters back stroke. She was to defend the championship in this event, won at Los Angeles four years ago.

Scores Committee Treasurer.

Among the officials she named Gustavus T. Kirby, New York attorney and treasurer of the American Olympic committee. At a mock marriage and mock trial, "ostensibly given as an entertainment feature," she declared, Kirby "so handled the dialogue having to do with marital situations that it was open to questionable interpretations and altogether unsuitable for youthful ears."

"The reaction to the whole show was such that it was the talk of the boat for days afterwards," she said.

With reference to her own imbibing, Mrs. Jarrett said officials knew beforehand ". . . I like a good time, particularly champagne." Furthermore, she said there was no general rule against drinking among athletes, that the bar was open daily and nightly in two sections in which the athletes were quartered, and that "on at least one occasion the bar didn't close until well after midnight."

"Under such conditions how did the American Olympic committee think it could maintain such absolute discipline as it appeared to desire or

BY HENRY BUCKLEY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MADRID, July 25.—[Censored.]—The eighth day of the Spanish revolt today brought a major defeat for the army-Fascist insurgents in the southeastern section of the country. The city of Albacete, a strategic center southeast of the capital, was captured from rebel forces after a heavy aerial bombardment by government planes, according to an official announcement.

With the capture of Albacete, which had been in rebel hands for a week, it is believed it will be possible to restore railroad communication with Valencia, Cartagena, Murcia, Alicante, and other eastern ports. Thus, the problem of moving loyal forces and bringing food supplies to the capital will be greatly facilitated.

Rebel Leader Kills Self.

"Loyal aviation units coöperated in the capture of the city," the government's announcement said. "They bombarded enemy positions, previously located by observation flights, without damaging the city or the civil population, which, together with local authorities, signified adhesion to the government when the loyal forces entered Albacete."

The government added that the leader of the rebel forces in Albacete killed himself.

Skirmishing continued today in the mountains around Madrid, the scene of heavy fighting for three days. Fighting is difficult in these mountains, which reach a height of 6,000 feet and where there are many pine forests. The task of the loyal forces in storming and taking the heights, held by experienced rebel troops, is difficult and costly.

Set Pine Woods Afire.

At Somosierra loyal airplanes bombed the pine woods with inflammatory material and set them ablaze, thus robbing the subversive forces of shelter. The rebels here are about 60 miles from Madrid. The capital, therefore, can feel that its defense to the north is satisfactory. The government announced two rebel airplanes had been shot down at Somosierra pass.

South and east of Madrid the situation seems satisfactory for the government forces. Railroad service has been restored to Talavera, in Estremadura province.

Officials said loyalist militiamen had captured Caspe, 50 miles southeast of Saragassa.

Bullfighters Pledge Loyalty.

A representative of Madrid banks called on Prime Minister Jose Giral today and offered their support to the government. They subscribed $15,000 to a fund for establishing hospitals.

A commission of bullfighters headed by Marcial La Landa also called on the government and offered the support of 1,000 members of the society of Bullfighters and their assistants.

The government announced that a rebel plane left Morocco under orders to bomb leftist troops near Algeciras, but en route the pilot threw overboard the observer, a lieutenant in the foreign legion, and then landed at Getafe airport, where he placed himself under orders of the government.

Bomb Rebels at Cordoba.

MADRID, July 25.—(AP)—Reports from loyal forces surrounding Cordoba, in southwestern Spain, said loyal planes bombarded rebel positions several times today and the Fascist columns were beginning to scatter.

Miners, armed with dynamite, enabled the liberals to take possession of the town of El Carpio, in Toledo province, where rebel stations were blown up.

Three separate loyalist movements advanced toward Saragossa.

Seville, where local militiamen defied rebels who attempted to dominate the entire territory, was the destination of a fast moving army of reenforcements in the south.

Oviedo, chief city of the Asturias, was reported in the hands of the rebel Col. Aranda, who seized it after pretending to lead liberal defense units through the streets. Loyal Asturian miners are reported to have surrounded Oviedo with rifles and huge quantities of dynamite.

The government disclosed that 28 of Spain's 50 provinces were in the hands of rebels.

Rebels Revise Plans.

WITH THE RIGHT WING OF THE FASCIST NORTHERN ARMY NEAR ARANDA DE DUERO, Spain, July 25.—(AP)—Fascist invaders, their camp a jumbled confusion of warring men and machines, massed tonight behind jagged mountain peaks 60 miles north of Madrid.

Further advances by the rebels awaited revision of military plans, upset by defeats at the hands of loyal defenders manning the gateway passes in the Guadarrama mountains. The rebel commanders acknowledged that their drive on the capital had not reached its final stages at the gates of Madrid.

A curt "maybe" met inquiries on whether the rebel plan of assault included a siege of the chief city.

FLEET TRIES BLOCKADE

BY JAY ALLEN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GIBRALTAR, July 25.—Off Gibraltar tonight was lurking a loyal Spanish republican fleet prepared to renew tomorrow the offensive begun today with the support of planes and submarines.

It is making a determined effort to cut off the rebel general, Francisco Franco, and the remaining Moors and Foreign Legionnaires in Africa from their confederates on the Spanish mainland, thus scotching the threat of a march of mercenaries on loyal Malaga and Madrid.

There were mysterious shadows in the Straits of Gibraltar. Three warships were patroling back and forth off this pillar of Hercules, watching Ceuta, the other pillar, which is the rebels' seaport. They have only their running lights, but now and then a British searchlight picks them out. There also are shadows in the skies with running lights, over the bay near Algeciras, and unless this correspondent is mistaken they are Gen. Franco's heaviest bombers carrying Moors to Algeciras.

Warships Shell Ceuta.

Early this morning the elderly warship, Jaime I., and the modern cruisers, Cervantes and Libertad, and three submarines took up positions in the straits, from where they opened fire on Ceuta. Fleets of government planes flew at 5,000 feet observing. They made an occasional circle over Algeciras to drop bombs.

The Libertad and Cervantes were slightly ahead as the loyal squadron moved southeast, gradually getting nearer the objective. Eight miles was the closest they got. The Ceuta batteries answered briskly. British gunners on Europa point, Gibraltar, saw water spouts rise around all three of the attackers.

A jet of steam from the Jaime I. seemed to indicate it was struck, but it continued firing. A bomber roared out from Ceuta over the straits and immediately the sky was dotted with white bursts of smoke that floated like parachutes—shrapnel. Observers here think the plane was hit. Later it was reported a rebel plane had fallen in the sea off Marbella, Spain.

After two hours of shelling the squadron moved down the African coast and gave the foreign legion barracks at El Riffien a serious drubbing. At 10:30 o'clock it returned and shelled Ceuta until 11:30, when it drew off toward Malaga.

REBEL CHIEF SAYS UPRISING IS FIGHT FOR CHRISTIANITY

Carlist Leader Outlines Aims of Revolt.

BY EDMOND TAYLOR.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PAMPLONA, Spain, July 25.—The generals may be fighting for power and the capitalists for economic loot, but the real force behind the Spanish insurrection is a religious crusade born here among the granite ribbed hills of Navarre.

The aim of the insurrection, in the minds of the men who launched it, is not primarily to install Fascism in Spain nor to restore the monarchy, though they may do both of these things. Neither is it simply to stamp out bolshevism, though this is the immediate avowed objective of the movement.

Back to the Middle Ages.

Deeper than all this is the instinctive turning back toward the middle ages, and the resurgents are of the same warlike mysticism which animated the ancestors of these rebels when they swept down from their mountains to drive out the Moors.

This analogy is not my own, but was given me today during an unusual interview with the man who really started the Spanish civil war—José Falconde, chief of the Spanish Carlists.

"This is more than a revolt," Falconda, a friendly, gentle but virile little man of 40, declared. "Spain has twice saved Christianity in Europe, once from the Moors and again from the Turks at the battle of Lepanto. Now we are fighting to save it from Marxism, which will spread all over Europe if it triumphs in Spain. This will be the third time we have saved Europe, the third sign from God."

Carlists Hold Military Mass.

It is easy to believe that Falconde and his Carlist followers felt themselves as crusaders. I had just witnessed a military mass in the main plaza in celebration of the insurrection and of the patron saint of Spain, Santiago de Camposello, whose feast day it was.

There, under the burning Spanish sun, in the picturesque square ablaze with red and yellow banners, I saw the "requettes"—the Carlist militia—with their red berets and rifles strapped to their backs, kneeling in the dust like some knightly legion of the middle ages. Kneeling with them in his gorgeous uniform was the rebel president of the provisional government set up Thursday in Burgos, Gen. Miguel Cabanellas Ferrer.

I reflected that the Carlists were only one element in the revolution—the other main element being the Fascists of young José Antonio Prime de Rivera, son of the late dictator, and the army—and that the requettes were only the local Navarre militia.

Boasts of Carlist Strength.

When I mentioned these doubts to Falconde he said, his eyes flashing:

"I have been organizing the requettes secretly for five years, and I am satisfied they are one of the strongest military forces in Spain. More than 12,000 Navarrese requettes are fighting with the armies beyond the frontiers of the province and we are now arming 2,500 more. We could put 20,000 requettes under arms in a few days if necessary.

"No province has made as great a contribution to the insurrection as Navarre, and we Carlists affirm our moral right of leadership of the movement.

"When the National Patriotic front was formed, we submerged our own interests as Carlists and agreed not to raise the question of the monarchy until later. In return we exacted that the Navarre viewpoint be respected and the influence of Navarre would be strongly felt. We entered the movement on the condition it be military and not political—that is, its objective should be to set up a military dictatorship and not a dictatorship of a party."

Outlines Carlist Aims.

Falconde then outlined the Carlists' ideal, which is summed up by saying it was to fight Marxism and liberalism and to fight for religion and national unity, which were menaced by the Basque and Catalan separatist movements. The Carlists want, eventually, an absolute monarchy with a corporate base and are willing to accept as monarch Juan, the son of the former King Alfonso XIII., provided he abandons his father's liberal ideas.

The requettes are a picked body of men and, despite a political program smacking of Fascism, they have a knightly character which is very different from that of the German Nazis and the Italian Black Shirts. They might be described as Fascists without castor oil.

The members of the Spanish phalanx of Primo de Rivero are just like any one else's Fascists. One cannot help wondering whether a new civil war may not, one day, arise out of a clash between them and the Carlists.

United for the Moment.

For the moment the various rebel forces are taking care not to step on one another's toes. This was made clear by Cabanellas. When asked whether the new Spanish régime would be Fascist or monarchist, the general replied: "It will be a republic, I think."

Cabanellas is a benevolent, dignified old man with a white beard. Most of my interview with him consisted in assurances of his desire to restore peace without bloodshed.

"The solution is near at hand, I firmly believe," he said. "The day is near when there will be neither right nor left in Spain, but one united people."

LOYALIST SPANISH SHIP SHELLS REBEL FORTS

The Cervantes, with two other loyalist vessels, was reported bombarding rebel forts on the Moroccan shore. SPANISH LINER SAILS FOR HOME; REDS HINT MUTINY IS PLANNED

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—The Spanish liner Cristobal Colon sailed for Spain today with 441 worried passengers aboard.

"The crew is leftist," said George Edwards, chairman of a group of communist demonstrators who had gathered at the pier to demonstrate against Fascism. "The officers' feelings are not so well known. However that may be, it is entirely possible that before the ship reaches Spain it may be a workers' ship."

A police guard surrounded the Cristobal Colon, which reached here from Mexico and Havana, and even reporters and friends of the passengers were barred from the docks. The ship was scheduled to sail at noon but did not clear until 2: 5 p. m. A crowd of 300 paraded in front of the pier shouting "Vive the revolution! Long live a workers' Spain!" Agents for the line said most of the passengers were "seasonal vacation travelers," merchants, and business men.

The Franco-Iberian line announced today that its ships had been ordered to discontinue stops at all Spanish ports.

PESETAS LEAVE SPAIN HIDDEN IN BULLS' QUARTERS

[Copyright: 1936: By the New York Times.]

LISBON, Portugal, July 25.—Banks and exchange houses here are flooded with offers to buy pesetas and many stories are told about how these notes have been brought to Portugal, although the Spanish government prohibited them from leaving the country.

It is said that when some big, fierce Spanish bulls were recently shipped from Andalusia to Lisbon for bull fights, they were trampling on straw in their freight cars which concealed several hundred kilograms of notes of the banks of Spain. Nobody wanted to make too close an inspection of the bulls in their quarters on the train and so the hidden money passed unsuspected.

HANGING VICTIM CALLED SUICIDE.

A coroner's jury returned a verdict of suicide yesterday in the death of Charles Englert, 65 years old, 615 North Wells street, whose body was found earlier in the day hanging from a transom window in his room.

AMERICANS MISS DEATH BY 10 FEET IN SPANISH HOTEL

Refugees Tell Harrowing Tales of Revolt.

BY JAY ALLEN.

[Copyright: 1936: By The Chicago Tribune.]

GIBRALTAR, July 25.—Four Americans among twenty evacuated from Seville by the British destroyer Shamrock had the most harrowing experience yet reported by refugees from revolt torn Spain.

Two of them are middle westerners, Dr. D. B. Esterly and his mother, Mrs. D. E. Esterly, of Topeka, Kas. With James R. McIlroy of Pittsburgh and Lester Barnum of Lower California, they were caught in the Hotel de Inglaterra, a no man's land between the city hall and the civil governor's palace, in which the rival forces were respectively entrenched.

Hotel Hit by Shells.

The terrified guests took refuge in the lobby of the ground floor, which is deep, but protected only by wooden shutters. As the climax of hours of horror, during which six 3-inch shells struck the upper stories and countless bullets zinged through the hotel, a seventh 3-inch shell crashed into the dining room and killed a waiter standing by a column only ten feet from where they sat. The party was showered with flying tiles and plaster.

A party of Americans in the hotel Cristina spent five days in cellars, but were in less danger, although the upper floors of the hotel were ceaselessly raked by bullets for two days.

They were continually endangered by bombs from the air, first from the rebels, who were bombing out the loyalists, and then from government planes which were bombing out the rebellious military. The party included Dr. and Mrs. B. Robert Silver and Mr. and Mrs. Dirck Stamler of New York, Miss Eleanor Perrett of New York and Miss Alva Carter.

U. S. Women Find Romance.

A less terrifying, and in some respects a romantic, experience was enjoyed by the Misses Ann Rigney of New York and Ethel Mackey of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who lodged in the magnificent Hotel de Madrid, once a palace, and for days moved in the society of imposing rebel generals and grandees of Spain and the family of Juan Belmonte, the bullfighter.

"After this experience we are Fascists all right," they said jauntily. "Those communists did awful things. They are such dreadful people. There were communist snipers on the roof above us and you should have seen them when they were captured and brought down."

Dr. Mary Watters of Jonesboro, Ark., who was quietly working in the famous archives of the Indias [Archivo General de Indias] when the battle began, went to her home in an outlying pension where there was no danger.

[The Archivo General de Indias, which was founded in 1781, boasts a large collection of documents relating to the government of the Philippines and America. It contains autographs of Americus Vespucius, Magellan, Balboa, and others.]

Give Impressions of Revolt.

Nearly all the regufees were convinced that the battle was between the army and "communists." One learned that Spain was so communistic before the revolt that the street signs and some newspapers were printed in Russian.

None of them had learned that among the "communists" shot down, bombed, and executed at street corners by the foreign legion were many Republicans trying to defend what they imagined to be a democratic republic with a chance to avoid communism against rebels who were the essence of the old feudal Spain which resisted by every means in its power, not excluding insolence, the mild reforms of the conservative republic that followed former King Alfonso XIII.

WIFE OF NORWEGIAN CONSUL IS REPORTED SLAIN BY SPANIARDS

SAINT JEAN DE LUZ, France, July 25.—(AP)—The slaying of the Norwegian consul's wife and her nurse in San Sebastian, Spain, by boys barely big enough to hold rifles was reported tonight by refugees reaching here from that city.

Youths of 14 and 16, enlisted in the Popular Front [government] militia, roamed the streets in defiance of their superiors and fired indiscriminately on suspected Fascists, the refugees said.

Dona Carmen Adam of Havana said the Norwegian woman was wounded first in the arm when she peered through a curtain from her apartment. Then, as she was helped down to an ambulance by a nurse in uniform, Dona Carmen said, a fusillade rang out and both the nurse and the patient fell dead. The consul's wife was expecting a baby within the month, the Havana woman said.

CIVIL WAR TRAPS 148 AMERICANS IN MADRID EMBASSY

Unable to Flee Revolt Torn Capital.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., July 25.—A little colony of 148 Americans settled down within the walls of the embassy at Madrid today with a two weeks' food supply and fears that returning troops might run wild after a decisive victory or defeat.

Such was the brief sketch of the American situation in the Spanish capital painted hastily today by Eric C. Wendelin, third secretary in charge of the beleaguered embassy, during a trans-Atlantic telephone conversation with Secretary of State Cordell Hull in his Washington office.

No Chance to Flee.

While American nationals were being evacuated from the seacoast towns, there was no chance for those in Madrid to break through the lines of fighting rebel and loyalist forces to reach the sea, Wendelin reported, in response to a question by Secretary Hull.

"There is no communication with the seacoast anywhere," Wendelin said. "No means of leaving Madrid. The only way would be to evacuate by airplane, which would be utterly unfeasible. All railroad communications are cut."

Among the Americans in the embassy are Mrs. Irving B. Pflaum of Chicago and Buddy Saurwein, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Saurwein of Chicago.

The state department tonight asked its agents in Spain to attempt to locate Mrs. Monica Owen of Cambridge, Mass., and a party of New England college girls. They have not been heard from since a few days before the revolt began.

In a message routed through the navy department, the state department announced that the battleship Oklahoma which arrived at Bilbao, on the north Spanish coast, yesterday, received reports from consular attachés that "trouble was imminent." The Oklahoma took on thirty women and children at Bilbao, including Mrs. P. M. Torrence of Urbana, Ill., and then went to Santander, where nine persons were evacuated. The coast guard cutter Gayuga, at San Sebastian, reported that all Americans who so desired had been evacuated.

Reports Precautions Taken.

The trans-oceanic conversation between Secretary Hull and Wendelin was the first direct contact with the embassy at Madrid since the revolt began. The state department has had the order in for the call for a week.

"The military attaché of this embassy is in close touch with the military situation and does not believe there will be any serious trouble," Wendelin said, "except that after a decisive defeat or victory the troops might return to Madrid and run wild. As this may happen at any time, we have taken precautions. A battle is now going on about fifty miles to the north of Madrid."

Wendelin did not give any details of the precautionary measures. Earlier advices had been that only four armed guards were available for protection at the embassy.

Government Holding Own.

"The government is holding its own very well and the morale of the people in Madrid is good," Wendelin reported. "We have food and water supplies and believe we are able to remain here rather comfortably for at least two weeks. The socialists and the communists are in control. The embassy has made all preparations to hold out until the situation changes."

Wendelin told Secretary Hull that the Americans had given "wholehearted coöperation," although the embassy was "very overcrowded." There were 161 men, women, and children in the embassy, of whom 148 were Americans. The remainder of the 300 Americans in Madrid were almost all Filipino or Porto Rican nationals, he said. The government and the police headquarters had given "every possible assistance," according to Wendelin.

Middle Westerners Removed.

Other Americans evacuated by the Oklahoma included:

Mrs. W. N. Chapman, wife of American consul, and son, Robert, of San Antonio; Mrs. C. A. Carlisle and son, Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. P. Maenner and son, Cleveland; Miss Nettie Cowin, Cleveland; Roy B. Cowin, Bethlehem, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Edmund C. Heine and three sons, Detroit; R. R. Thursby, Akron, O.

The Oklahoma also took on seven English, five French, and one Swiss subject, and Mrs. Julie Varas, Spanish maid of Mrs. Chapman.

At Barcelona, Consul Lynn W. Franklin reported that the S. S. Exeter of the American Export Line took aboard eighty Americans and eighty foreigners, including the consul general of El Salvador and family, consul general of Guatemala and family, and the wife and three children and mother-in-law of Consul Franklin.

Included in the state department list of those who were evacuated from Barcelona and arrived safely at Marseilles were the following: William L. and Francis L. Talbot, whose birthplace was given as Chicago; Harriet C. Hobble, Plymouth, Ill.; and Flora E. Hobble, Parita, Ill.

In the group evacuated from Malaga and carried to Gibraltar by the British steamer Brazen was Miss M. Rie Hallinan of Chicago.

Reds Rule Valencia.

Consul Thomas D. Davis at Valencia, in a communication to Franklin, said the city was in the hands of communists, but the civil government was acting with a strong hand. American lives and property were safe, he reported.

Nearly all the Americans at Tarragona had left on a British steamer, according to Consular Agent Caesar Franklin Agostino.

Consul William W. Corcoran at Vigo cabled for funds to aid destitute Americans, adding that he was maintaining several needy American born children whose Spanish fathers had disappeared. The American Red Cross made $500 available for Corcoran. Americans were being evacuated on passenger vessels putting in at Vigo.

Americans Taken to France.

Robert D. Longyear, consul at Marseilles, France, reported that the British steamer Garland had arrived with ten Americans aboard, one of whom was Miss Josephine De Boer of Arlington Heights, Ill. The French steamer Djenne arrived with five Americans. The British steamers Douglas, Gallant, and Gypsy arrived with several other evacuated Americans.

Secretary Hull instructed Consul Franklin to extend financial relief to the family of Santiago Iturralde, Spanish clerk in the consulate who was shot to death while riding to the outskirts of the city in a car bearing the American flag. Iturralde was on his way to bring George Jenkins, Ford Motor company employé who had been isolated by the fighting, to the consulate. His British chauffeur also was killed.

SPAIN ENLISTS WOMEN TO FIGHT REBEL TROOPS

MADRID, July 25.—(AP)—Women as soldiers were recognized officially in Spain tonight with the formation of a militia battalion composed completely of feminine fighters.

Reports from various sectors throughout revolt torn Spain said women have been playing an active role in combatting the Fascist revolt.

Some have participated bravely, militia officers said, in fighting in the Guadarrama mountains and in certain districts in southern Spain.

MOSCOW HAILS WAR IN SPAIN AS BOOST FOR REDS

Sees Rebels Defeated by Armed Workers.

BY DONALD DAY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

RIGA, Latvia, July 25.—Civil war in Spain has been greeted with enthusiasm by the Moscow press, which predicts early success for the leftist Madrid government since it has distributed arms and ammunition to more radical labor unions.

This step, according to the Trud, official newspaper of communist trade unions, increased the number of combatants in Spain by many thousands and has promoted the development of class warfare. It only remains for the revolutionary leaders to direct their forces correctly to insure a victory for the Red forces, the newspaper said.

Indorses French Action.

The soviet press warmly indorsed the action of the Popular Front government of France which, according to Moscow information, has forwarded large supplies of war munitions to Spain to help defeat what the Reds call the Fascist reactionary forces led by the army.

The comment of other soviet papers has been guarded since, according to information obtained in diplomatic circles, Maxim Litvinov, commissar of foreign affairs, requested M. Halatov, chief government censor, to suppress bolshevik jubilation over the events in Spain. He presumably fears a too vociferous indorsement might affect his campaign abroad to pose as Europe's most peace loving statesman.

Litvinov also is reported to be worried because the Spanish revolution may hinder his attempts to obtain Great Britain's support for the Franco-soviet pact against Germany.

Attack Nazi Government.

The entire soviet press is waging a vitriolic attack against the Nazi government, alleging that Germany today symbolizes the nationalist doctrin of Europe which is opposing the spread of Moscow's international propaganda. Both the newspapers Pravda and Izvestia include Poland in their anti-German campaign, charging that the Polish government has joined Reichsfuehrer Hitler in an alliance against bolshevism.

Reports of crop conditions have disappeared from the columns of the soviet press, but according to short wave radio conversations which officials of the grain trust are holding with their agents throughout the grain regions, there is the possibility that a serious famine will affect wide areas in the coming winter.

SPANISH REVOLT SPLITS EUROPE INTO TWO CAMPS

Nazis, Italy Aid Rebels; French Help Government.

BY DAVID DARRAH.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, July 25.—Europe is split wide open over the Spanish revolt and grave international complications are threatened as the civil war enters its second week with a casualty list estimated here at 25,000.

The European split follows the general lines of opposing political opinions and is focused on the question of supplying arms and ammunition to the Spanish contestants.

France, with its Socialist government, favors the leftist régime of President Manuel Azana in Madrid, and French munitions firms are helping the government in power, according to reports here.

Germany, Italy Aid Rebels.

On the other hand, Germany and Italy are helping the rebels with moral and material aid. British official policy is "noninterference," but the sympathy here is for the rebels since it is feared a victory for the Spanish radicals may plunge the nation into a communistic experiment. It is remembered that Nicolai Lenin predicted Spain would be the next country after Russia to go communist.

The rift over Spain also tends to separate the British and French, and there is a report that the British have intimated to the French that supplying munitions to the Madrid government forces is not approved here. The question is whether it will lead the British to supply the rebels in turn.

Questions of British policy on Spain will be brought up in the house of commons next week. A. M. Lyons, conservative, will ask "whether the foreign secretary has received a representation from the Spanish government similar to those addressed to the French government for permission to negotiate for a supply of arms from British sources."

Another Question.

He will ask further whether Capt. Anthony Eden, foreign secretary, has been in communication with the French government on the subject of British coöperation in the Spanish conflict and whether he can give assurance that this country will not be involved in any French intervention.

Outside of government circles, opinion in this country is split as it is in France and elsewhere. One section holds that the struggle in Spain is for organized constitutionalism and democracy, while the other side sees Spain about to slip into anarchistic disorder.

The issue which seems to be flatly posed in the chancelleries is whether Spain is going to add another country to the Fascist list or whether it is going Red.

Consultations are taking place between the governments as to what concerted measures might be possible in view of the slaughter which is going on, according to reports.

Claim French Refuse Aid.

PARIS, July 25.—(AP)—The French government refused Spain's request tonight to send planes, arms, and ammunition to Madrid to help Spanish Liberals crush the army-Fascist rebellion, authoritative sources declared.

Government deputies said the French cabinet, at a special session, declined to approve either direct or indirect shipments of war equipment into Spain.

While French leftists are sympathetic toward the Spanish popular front's fight, the deputies explained, the government decided to remain faithful to the traditional policy of noninterference in the internal affairs of foreign powers.

POVERTY BLAMED FOR 5 YEARS OF SPANISH CHAOS

Whys and Wherefores of Revolt Explained.

BY DAVIS DOUTHIT.

The five year old Spanish republic, touched off by a violent social upheaval, today is running wild. It is threatening to crack up in a military dictatorship with the generals of the current revolt, backed by Fascists, monarchists, and other right wing factions, in the saddle. Next month, or next year, the republic may be roaring just as perilously near to a revenging Socialist dictatorship.

Spain has been galloping from side to side ever since 1931. When the republicans pried Alfonso XIII. from his throne, they also pried open a political Pandora's box from which has popped every year strikes, riots, church burnings, massacres, revolts and general chaos.

Factions Waver in Loyalties.

Factions have united and separated. Generals have changed from monarchists to republicans and back again. Leaders have jailed and gone to jail, freed and been freed, governed and gone to jail again. President Manuel Azana is an ex-jailbird; so was President Niceto Alcala Zamora before him.

The monarchists revolted in 1932; the anarcho-syndicalists in 1933, the left wing radicals in October, 1934, and now the generals. In between have been countless minor revolts and switches from left to right governments and back again because of elections. Spain, in truth, has been a bedlam, merry-go-round nation, and the end is not yet.

In seeking the reason for all this bedlam, it helps to get the various important Spanish factions "doped out," and it helps to examine the conditions under which they exist.

Nation Leads in Illiteracy.

Spain has by far the greatest percentage of illiteracy in western Europe. Of its 28,000,000 population, about 45 per cent can neither read nor write. Fifty per cent of all children have had no schooling.

Spain is 65 per cent agricultural. Ten million farmers are cramped on less land than is occupied by 4,000 feudally entrenched aristocrats. About 350 grandees own 3,000,000 acres of land. Six hundred thousand farm laborers own no land. In a typical case harvest peasants earn 6 or 7 pesetas—a peseta is worth about 14 cents—a day, and there have been official reports of people eating grass.

There are nearly 1,000,000 unemployed, with little or no relief payments. Many industrialists are being forced to close their plants and are leaving the country. So are millions of pesetas, and the government is virtually bankrupt.

This background of poverty and ignorance explains a lot about Spain, explains why utopian promises of the various "isms" have thrived, explains the overthrow of the monarchy, as the supposed cause of it all, and explains why the nation, as it struggles to bring its medievalish society up to date, is split essentially into left and right opposing camps—one bulwarked by the Marxists aiming at revolution; the other by the church, fighting for its very existence.

There are only a few thousand pure anarchists in Spain, but nearly 500,000 Syndicalists—mostly in Barcelona, Madrid, and other industrial centers—imbued with anarchist ideas. They maintain schools to teach the doctrin of integral freedom and lawless universal brotherhood.

They disclaim political ambition, devote their energy to tossing bombs, stirring up strikes and riots, and encouraging individual acts of violence. They broke their non-political tradition, however, in the February elections this year by joining the leftist Popular Front coalition and thereby swung the scales in the latter's favor.

The Socialists and Reds think the Syndicalists are disintegrating, hope to harness them to the Marxist cause.

Largo Caballero's Socialists, one of the largest of the political groups, are THE party of Marxist revolution.

Largo Caballero, known as the Spanish Lenin, has openly preached revolution, urged a government by the workers and, if necessary, a Socialist dictatorship and a reign of terror with it.

Bore from Within.

Workers', or Red, committees have been formed and workers' militias, as well as "cells" within the army and certain police corps. Direct action is encouraged and carried out, such as the seizure of estates, strikes by the General Union of Labor, and forced freeing of Marxist prisoners.

The Caballeros have been biding their time since the oloody but vain Asturias revolt in 1934, preparing the next time for a solar plexus revolt. The generals may have helped them out.

Almost identical in aims to the Caballero outfit are the communists, though much smaller in number. The only difference, according to a Caballero spokesman, is that the communists take orders from Moscow, the Caballeros from Caballero.

Prieto's Socialists, Azana's Left Republicans and other Leftist units may be grouped together as Liberals. They prefer evolution to revolution, sweet reason to bloodshed, have taken official stands against revolution and against strikes. Since February they have been, or were, until the civil war, trying to run the nation with the temporary consent, but not the coöperation, of the left wing extremists.

The Other Side.

Now, swinging over into the right, or anti-Marxist camp, we find the church, the monarchists, the Fascists and the generals.

For centuries the church has been a social and economic, as well as a religious force in Spain, a country today 95 per cent Roman Catholic. It entered into almost all kinds of commercial activity, was not taxed, and controled most of the national education. Its clergy received regular stipends from the state. One-third of the national wealth was said to be in the hands of the church.

Spain, in other words, was, until the republic, a church state. When the monarchy prospered, the church prospered. When the monarchy came upon evil days, so did the church, for the church symbolized in the minds of the people the régime under which they were miserable.

Hundreds of Churches Burned.

So, when the republic came in, the church and its clergy were injured immediately. The Jesuit order was dissolved, pay for 60,000 members of the clergy was cut off, and the church was definitly separated from the state. In addition, and extralegally, of course, hundreds of churches were burned and looted.

It is not difficult to see why the church is anti-Republican, why the Republicans, and even more so the Marxists, are anti-church. If the Marxists gain power, the church inevitably loses, and vice versa, as was evidenced by the temporary victory gained at the polls in 1933 by the conservative forces led by Gil Robles, church political leader.

The monarchists, second in the right wing camp, are self-explanatory. And though they are cheering on the present revolt, they are given only a slight chance at present of achieving a restoration to the throne of Alfonso or any other Bourbon or Carlist.

Slaying of Fascist a Factor.

The Fascists, under José Antonio Primo de Rivera, son of the dictator of the 1920's, suffered a setback by the leftist election victory last February, but they continue to menace the Marxist security, engage in frequent clashes with their Red foes.

Recently Gen. José Calvo Sotelo, recognized as the coming Fascist leader, was assassinated. This may have had something to do with precipitating the present revolt. At any rate, the Fascists have attached themselves firmly to the coattails of the revolt generals in hopes of victory rewards.

Now for the generals, the immediate cause of all the present shooting. The "general" problem has probably caused the republic more grief than any other single factor. In Spain's great days, the army was the king's obedient and terrible blade. It was natural that it should come to be, under Alfonso XIII., the dominant force in the nation, even though it had no worlds to conquer, no Napoleons to drive back. But it was true that he who controls the army controls Spain.

A Nation of Generals.

Built up by centuries of civil and colonial wars, the Spanish army has a brilliantly topheavy construction. Recent figures give it a strength of 165,000, of which 19,000 were officers, and at least 250 were generals, a general to every 760 men.

The generals have no illusions as to military conquest. They direct their energy instead into domestic affairs. Their specialty is political intrigue. Thus it was the late Gen. José Sanjurjo who turned the mighty civil guard over to the republic when the monarchy fell, but it was also Gen. José Sanjurjo who led the 1932 revolt against the republic and for the monarchists.

Leaders of the present revolt are the survivals of what Jay Allen, THE TRIBUNE'S correspondent in Spain, calls Alfonso's Praetorian guard. Gen. Francisco Franco, youngest Spanish general, but reported to be of dictatorial caliber, had been virtually exiled as military head of the Canary Islands. Gen. Queipo de Llano, who rose against Alfonso because the king once humiliated him, is now fighting the republic because Azana fired him from a good job in Alcala Zamora's military household.

Gen. Manuel Goded is supposed to have conspired against de Rivera and all other governments since just for the fun of it. Most other officers in the revolt are facing investigation for their parts in the bloody repression of the Asturias revolt and feel they have everything to gain, little to lose.

These, then, are the conditions and the discordant factions which have made the Spanish republic what it is today. None of the numerous factions has been able to hold its allies long enough to bring order out of the confusion.

And though, alarmed by Fascism, united long enough to win the February elections, they soon drifted apart. The anarcho-syndicalists, the Caballero Socialists, and the communists went back to their own devices, the factions in the left wing camp leaving the moderate Azana left Republicans and Liberals to run the government.

Castor Oil Next?

The country broke out in a rash of strikes, disorders, land seizures, Fascist-Red clashes, and church burnings. One estimate put the dead at 269, the injured at 1,287, the churches destroyed at 160, the strikes at 341. In Madrid alone 120,000 were idle. As one strike was settled another popped up.

Azana pleaded with Caballero to call off his revolutionary friends. The Spanish Lenin, calling for more direct action, refused. The turmoil raged on. The generals struck.

What next? Well, it's Spain, and nobody knows for sure. But it's a fairly safe bet that the republic's kid glove days are waning. It looks like a swell chance for the castor oil and firing squads.

BRITISH KING TO UNVEIL VIMY WAR MEMORIAL TODAY

9,000 Canadian Veterans Return for Ceremony.

VIMY, France, July 25.—(AP)—A vast pilgrimage, headed by King Edward VIII. of England, converged on Vimy Ridge tonight for dedication of one of the greatest of world war memorials.

The British sovereign, accompanied by President Albert Lebrun of France, will pull a cord tomorrow to unveil before 100,000 spectators the Vimy Ridge monument to the memory of 64,000 Canadians who died in the war.

Three liners arrived at Le Havre and two at Antwerp bringing more than 6,000 Canadian pilgrims. A total of 9,000 Canadian veterans were expected to return to this northeast corner of France for the ceremony at the Ridge their troops captured April 12, 1917, in the battle of Arras.

King to Speak.

The British monarch, who as prince of Wales spent several months with the Canadians in France during the war, is to deliver an address after the unveiling. His words will be broadcast throughout the British empire.

The completed monument, a towering structure of white stone, represents ten years of labor at a cost of $1,000,000. Rising from the ridge, two pylons a few feet apart and 138 feet high—representing the Canadian and French armies—extend upward from a base 237 feet long. Between the pylons is a sculptured group symbolizing the spirit of sacrifice.

Figures in the group look upward toward statues of peace, justice, truth and knowledge. About the monument runs a massive wall of defense on which stands a stately feminine figure representing Canada.

On the walls in letters large enough to be read from a distance are chiseled the names of 11,500 missing Canadian soldiers who have no known graves.

The monument was designed by Walter Allward, Toronto sculptor, and won for him the award of the Canadian battlefields memorial commission. It was erected under the direction of officers of the Royal Canadian engineer corps.

Boards Yacht.

PORTSMOUTH, England, July 25.—(AP)—King Edward boarded the admiralty yacht Enchantress tonight en route to Vimy. The British ruler will remain aboard the yacht for breakfast tomorrow when he will receive a representative of President Lebrun of France and other officials before talking a special train inland. Three destroyers were escorting the yacht across the channel to Calais.

8 ARABS SLAIN, 4 WOUNDED IN HOLY LAND DISORDERS

JERUSALEM, July 25.—(AP)—Eight Arabs were slain in encounters with British troops in various parts of the Holy Land today as disorders which have claimed an estimated 170 Arab, Jewish and Christian lives approached the end of their fifteenth week.

Four other Arabs were wounded, two of them seriously, by premature explosion of bombs.

Censorship of the press, in effect since the disorders started with Arab protests against Jewish immigration and land holding April 19, was lifted by the authorities today.

RECORD IN SIGHT AS QUEEN MARY SPEEDS FOR U. S.

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—As the liner Queen Mary raced toward New York tonight, officials of the Cunard White Star line disclosed that the new British vessel will break the Atlantic crossing record set by the French liner Normandie last summer.

This prediction was based on the speed made by the Queen Mary since leaving Cherbourg breakwater at 7:42 p. m. last Wednesday. She is due at Ambrose Lightship at 11 p. m. tomorrow. At noon today the liner had covered 1,964 miles at an average speed of 29.80 knots an hour.

The record run of the Normandie was four days, 11 hours and 42 minutes at 29.64 knots, for the distance of 3,192 miles.

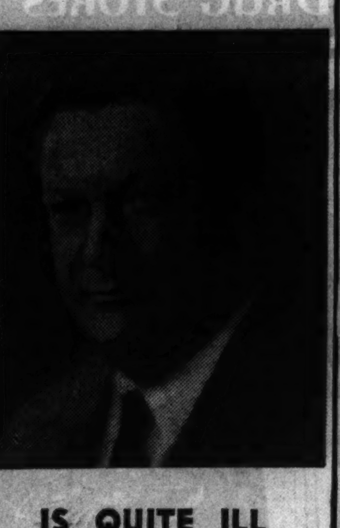
UNCLE BOB



IS QUITE ILL

"Uncle Bob" Wilson Is a Character and an Institution in Chicagoland

There are many happy homes in Chicagoland today ringing with childhood laughter and the romp of little feet. In many of these homes there might instead have been a great stillness on account of the little lives snuffed out by the ever-growing number of street accidents.

How many children's lives have been saved by Uncle Bob's "The Curb Is the Limit" club it is hard to estimate—certainly it must run into many thousands.

Uncle Bob loves children and the children of Chicagoland love Uncle Bob. That is why they have listened in rapt attention to his songs over the radio; that is why they have sent to him in such great numbers their pledges to follow out his suggestions to keep them safe from harm.

We are sure that many parents owe a debt of gratitude, if not the very lives of their children, to Uncle Bob.

Uncle Bob is now seriously ill. He is at Englewood Hospital and will probably be there for some time.

This article is written with the feeling that many children and maybe their parents might wish to send to Uncle Bob a cheering word, as we know it would help him in his battle for life and even help to save him as he has saved others.

We hope it will not be long before Uncle Bob is restored to his usual good, cheery self and that he may be able to return to the air in the Fall to continue his many years of service to the children of Chicagoland.

G. B. SHAW, 80 AND 'TOO BUSY TO DIE,' MAKES A WISH

Would Like to See Reds Run U. S., All Europe.

MALVERN, England, July 25.—(AP)—George Bernard Shaw—80 years old tomorrow and "too busy to die"—said tonight he would like to see communistic states in "all of Europe and America."

"I am a communist," he observed spiritedly, his bushy white beard bobbing as he spoke. "But I don't like the way they are running it in Spain. I read Karl Marx 14 years before Lenin did. If Lenin had read my works before he started, he would have saved himself many stupid mistakes."

Politics Gone to Shirts.

Politics—the Irish wit and playwright declared—has gone into the shirt business. The symbols of various movements have resulted in boosting the output of manufacturers of "black shirts, blue shirts, green shirts, and red shirts."

He extended his rapid-fire observations to include critical comment on parliamentary methods.

"The trouble with parliament," he said, "and the United States congress is that it takes them 30 years to do 30 minutes work. Then when it becomes necessary to do 30 years work in 30 minutes—well, it becomes a very bloody business.

"That is what is happening in Spain today. But even the communists in Spain have no more of a program than the Fascists—and that is no program at all. Neither have the Fascists in Italy."

Where's Mussolini Going?

Premier Mussolini, Shaw said, "makes unlimited quantities of noise but where is he going so fast?

"He is like an old fashioned automobile—a wonderfully awesome thing to watch and the explosions are thrilling, but it never took you where you wanted to go.

"Mankind is dreadfully stupid. The biggest thing we produce is trouble."

Turning to Hollywood, Shaw declared he would not direct one of his plays for the movies because "they would insist on taking out all my dialog—and besides I want £20,000 [$100,000]."

"That reminds me—" and with leaping strides, he rushed from the room on his way to the box office of the Malvern theater where his "Saint Joan" will be played tonight. The performance dedicated to Shaw, is the feature of a drama festival.

LINDY STUDIES CHARTS TOO LONG AND MISSES TRIP

BERLIN, July 25.—(AP)—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh today indulged his passion for the scientific side of flying so freely that he missed a yachting trip. The trip was scheduled, but the colonel was not working to schedule when he visited the aviation research center of Adlershof, on the outskirts of Berlin.

It was late afternoon before he took his nose out of charts and machinery. By that time it was too late to sail on Lake Wannsee. The American flyer for five hours, had examined the latest additions to German equipment for conquest of the air.

Earlier Lindbergh signed his name for Col. Ernst Udet, German war ace who brought down 22 allied planes. Furtively Lindbergh took the pad proffered by Udet, scribbled the name with his right hand and held the left hand over the paper to hide it. Just as furtively, he slipped it back to Udet. Lindbergh's meeting with Reichsfuehrer Hitler and Gen. Herman Wilhelm Goering, the air minister, was definitly set for July 30.

Mother, 12 Men Helpless as Boy Dies in Straw Fire

Baltimore, Md., July 25.—(AP)—A five year old boy was burned to death in a blazing straw shed at Hydes, near here, tonight while his mother and a dozen men stood helplessly by. UNCLE FREED IN CO-ED SLAYING; REMAINS IN JAIL

2 Others Still Held in Baffling Crime.

Asheville, N. C., July 25.—(AP)—Sherif Laurence E. Brown, announced tonight he had released Prof. W. L. Clevenger, uncle of 18 year old Helen Clevenger, slain in her hotel room here, but that the 54 year old bachelor "chose" to remain in jail.

Prof. Clevenger, dairy specialist at North Carolina State college, was taken into custoday late yesterday on his return from Ohio, where he attended the funeral of Miss Clevenger.

He was the seventh person to be detained in the investigation of the slaying of the pretty honor student, found shot and stabbed in her room at a fashionable hotel here ten days ago.

Two Others in Custody.

His technical release leaves only two persons, Daniel H. Gaddy, the hotel night watchman, and L. D. Roddy, colored elevator boy, in custody. No charges were filed against any of the persons detained in the case. They were held simply "for questioning."

A writ of habeas corpus for Prof. Clevenger's release was signed earlier in the day by Judge F. Donald Phillips.

Uncle Studies Evidence.

"When Prof. Clevenger found the writ had been drawn," Brown related, "he told his brother, C. B. Clevenger, that he did not want any outside interference; that he was going to stay in jail until this thing is cleared up. He's staying with us voluntarily."

The sherif disclosed that the professor, with whom his niece was spending a vacation when she was slain, is studying the evidence in the mysterious case.

Clevenger occupied a room about five doors from his niece's when she was shot and mutilated at about 1 a. m. and found the body when he went to her room five hours later to take her to breakfast.

Chicago Fisherman Injured Seriously by Speed Boat

Robert W. Hoefler, 37 years old, 8341 Rhodes avenue, was in serious condition at the Jackson Park hospital yesterday of injuries incurred last Wednesday when a speed boat ran into his boat while he was fishing in Paw Paw lake, Mich. Hoefler was treated at Benton Harbor and then brought to Chicago where it was necessary to amputate his right foot. His wife and three children saw the accident. Hoefler is a representative of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company.

HAMM KIDNAP JURY DECLARES PEIFER GUILTY

Abductor Free on Bond; Sentence Deferred.

St. Paul, Minn., July 25.—(AP)—A federal court jury tonight convicted John P. [Jack] Peifer, night club owner, on a charge of conspiracy in the $100,000 kidnaping of William Hamm Jr., St. Paul brewer.

Sentence was deferred until Wednesday, and Peifer was released until then on his bond of $100,000.

The jury, composed of eleven men and one woman, reached its verdict nearly twenty-five hours after it received the case Friday night. The jury agreed at 7:10 p. m., after ten hours and ten minutes of actual deliberations.

Federal Judge M. M. Joyce, who had announced he would receive a verdict up to 9 p. m. today and until the same hour tomorrow if necessary, was summoned from his home in Minneapolis to hear the verdict.

Named as "Fingerman."

Named as the "finger man" in the abduction, Peifer had been indicted as one of seven conspirators. He was the only one who stood trial after four had pleaded guilty.

They were Alvin Karpis, America's one time "public enemy No. 1"; Charles [Big Fitz] Fitzgerald, Los Angeles, who pretended to shake hands with Hamm as he seized him on June 15, 1933; Edmund C. Bartholmey, in whose home the brewer was imprisoned for four days at Bensenville, Ill., and Byron Bolton, reputed machine gunner for the Barker-Karpis mob.

The two others, Arthur [Doc] Barker and Elmer Farmer, are serving terms in Alcatraz prison for the $200,000 kidnaping of Edward G. Bremer, St. Paul banker, and were not brought to trial in the Hamm abduction. Barker is under life imprisonment and Farmer, former Bensenville, Ill., tavern keeper, is serving a twenty year term.

REPORT IMHOFF, FORMER OAK PARK OFFICIAL, CAUGHT

The Oak Park police were notified last night that a man identified as Wiley Imhoff, former manager of the village water department, who is wanted on a charge of embezzling department funds, was arrested yesterday in Seattle, Wash. An audit of Imhoff's accounts completed last week showed a shortage of $6,831 in the period from Jan. 1 to April 30.

Dispatches from Seattle said that the man seized was identified as Imhoff from circulars issued by the village of Oak Park and sent to police departments throughout the country. Oak Park officials said they would take steps to bring the man here as soon as they are satisfied he is Imhoff.

Imhoff, an employé of the village for 28 years, was dismissed March 10 after a preliminary audit of his accounts revealed irregularities. He and his wife disappeared the next day.

Report Cutten's Millions Put Away Safely in Canada

Rumors that the late Arthur Cutten, grain speculator, transferred millions of dollars in securities to Ontario, Canada, before his death gave rise to speculation yesterday as to whether the United States internal revenue department can claim any of this fortune, if it exists, as income and inheritance taxes.

Cutten, who once controled holdings estimated at 100 million dollars, died here June 24 after a long illness. Last Wednesday Attorney Dwight H. Green filed Cutten's will for probate. The lawyer said the entire estate was worth only about $350,000 and declared that as far as he knew Cutten had not established any trusts.

Estimated at 90 Million Dollars.

Canadian dispatches, however, say the Cutten holdings in Canada are estimated as high as 90 million dollars. Ontario officials said yesterday that if Cutten did transfer 90 million dollars there the province would collect about 20 million dollars in inheritance taxes. Cutten was a native of Guelph, Ont., but lived in Chicago most of his life and conducted his spectacular grain dealings here.

It was indicated that if the $90,000,000 estate does exist in Canada the United States internal revenue department may be unable to collect any inheritance and income taxes on it. Assistant United States Attorney Carl Perkins, assigned to the civil income tax department here, said that pending advice from Washington, D. C., he did not know what course could be taken.

"We suspected most of the Cutten estate might be in Canada," Perkins declared. "The general rule of law is that an estate should be probated where the testator resided and died, but whether this applies to an international situation I cannot say. The Canadian government has the right to the inheritance tax if the money is there, and maybe the United States has, too, if a legal way could be found to get hold of it."

"We don't know anything about the money," said Carter H. Harrison, collector of internal revenue in the Chicago area, "but if there is any we'll try to collect on it."

Indicted as Tax Evader.

Several months ago an indictment was returned against Cutten charging him with evading income taxes totaling $644,469 for the years 1929, 1930, and 1933. This indictment was automatically dropped with Cutten's death, but the government can still proceed by a civil suit to collect from his estate. United States District Attorney Michael L. Igoe said that no federal levy has yet been made.

Cutten's will, filed by Attorney Green, bequeathed his estate to his widow, the former Maude Boomer of Chicago. What disposition Cutten might have made of the Canadian millions, if there are such, is not known.

LANDON TO MEET VANDENBERG ON CAMPAIGN PLAN

Conference with Senator Set for Tuesday.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Topeka, Kas., July 25.—[Special.]—Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan is the next headliner of the Republican party who will appear in Topeka for a campaign conference with Gov. Alf M. Landon, the presidential nominee.

Senator Vandenberg, who was Gov. Landon's pre-convention opponent for the nomination and who declined to accept the vice presidential nomination, will visit with the governor Tuesday.

"Just a general campaign talk," said the governor this morning.

May Map Campaign Rôle.

This probably will include what part Senator Vandenberg, who has been the most effective sharpshooter against the New Dealers in Washington, will play in the campaign. The Michigan situation, too, will need discussion and planning, as well as a trip there by Gov. Landon later in the fall.

Benjamin M. Anderson, economist of the Chase National Bank of New York, and Col. Leonard P. Ayres of Cleveland, an authority on business and industrial trends, will confer Monday with Gov. Landon. The governor hav several other important conferences during the week.

On Aug. 1 Mr. Landon will make the annual governor's inspection trip and review the National Guard encampment at Fort Riley. He will remain in Topeka until after Aug. 4, the state primaries, he said today, and then will go to Colorado to rest and prepare the speeches for his eastern trip, his first big trip of the campaign, which will be taken late in August.

Social Security One Subject.

Social security is expected to form the subject of one of the three eastern addresses, probably that at Buffalo. In his acceptance speech the governor said on this subject:

"We shall amend the social security act to make it workable. We recognize that society, acting through government, must afford as large a measure of protection as it can against involuntary unemployment and dependency in old age. We pledge that the federal government will do its proper share in that task."

In Kansas the governor already has moved to have the people vote to amend the state constitution so that it will be possible to coördinate social security measures with federal law.

Important Subject in N. Y.

In New York this subject is likely to play a big part in the campaign, due to the position in which the Republicans have been maneuvered by the Democrats under Gov. Lehman. The state social security act was passed in the senate with Republican aid but was defeated in the house, which is Republican.

This has given the New York Democrats a chance to take a political position that Landon must overcome. The governor said today he had not definitly decided on what order of subjects he would speak, but he has promised to take up in detail the program which he outlined in his Thursday night speech. This would include the nature of the remedial legislation which he will propose as amendments to the Wagner-Lewis social security act.

It is possible that Landon also may enlarge on his labor declaration during this trip, as he will be in the center of an industrial district in Pennsylvania, where the feud between the craft and company unions is an important issue.

Plan New England Speech.

After the Pennsylvania-New York trip the governor will have two months in which to make himself known to the people. He is expected to make at least one speech in New England, probably at Boston, one in New York, and appear in Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, and probably Minnesota or one of the Dakotas.

The advantages of opening the campaign in West Middlesex, Pa., where the governor was born in the Methodist parsonage of his grandfather, are described in a letter from H. L. R. Anderson, chairman of the Mercer county Republican campaign committee, Grove City, Pa., as follows:

"The almost unbelievable and unknown fact is that West Middlesex, Mercer county, is the center of the greatest industrial region in the United States. It is located less than fourteen miles east of Youngstown, O., with its great industrial population of 170,000; seventy-four miles southeast of Cleveland, O., with a population within its industrial region of 1,350,000; sixty-two miles east of Akron, O., with a population of 255,040; sixty-seven miles northeast of Canton, O., with a population of 104,806; twenty miles east of Warren, O., with a population of 41,062, and other industrial cities in this eastern part of Ohio with many thousands of population.

Other Industrial Areas.

"On the part of western Pennsylvania it is eighty-four miles south of Erie with an industrial population of 115,067; seventy miles north of Pittsburgh, with a population within its industrial region of 1,374,410, and within a much nearer radius are such industrial centers as Butler, Newcastle, Sharon, the Beaver Valley cities, etc. Within easy driving distance are such industrial cities as Weirton, Wheeling, Fairmount, and Morgantown in West Virginia, and Jamestown and other cities in western New York.

"Within a radius of approximately 110 miles is encompassed an industrial population of 6,015,197. This radius includes the bulk of Pennsylvania's soft coal fields as well as her oil fields. Much of Ohio's oil and coal fields also are encompassed. It also includes one of the greatest iron and steel manufacturing regions in the world.

"This certainly gives us a wonderful region from which to draw and is one of the most strategic points in the state and nation from a vote getting angle. It will be a much better point from which to build up a wonderful attendance than would a large city."

Haussermann Meets Landon.

Judge John W. Haussermann, Republican national committeeman from the Philippines, called on Gov. Landon this morning. He said his conference had covered the following points:

"1. The present political and legal relations of the Philippines and the United States, stressing that the former still are under American sovereignty and therefore should be entitled to the advantages that go with the privilege.

"2. A holiday on Philippine independence discussions to give way to full economic discussions.

Free Trade Advocated.

"3. Advocacy of a continuation of Philippine-American free trade, for it has been mutually beneficial.

"4. Discussion of the natural resources of the Philippines, emphasizing that the Philippines can produce most of the tropical commodities which America now imports from foreign countries; also the mineral resources like gold, chrome, manganese, iron, coal, and oil.

"5. Discussion of the wisdom of a complementary economy between the United States and the Philippines under which the two countries, one a tropical country and the other a temperate country, can place their respective agricultural production on a complementary instead of conflicting basis; in this connection an economic survey of the resources of the Philippines would be necessary.

"6. The fact that there is nothing in connection with the Philippines that will enter into the present presidential campaign."

Sunflowers Are Blooming in New York for Landon

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—Sunflowers bloomed today on Dr. Felix von Offele's balcony at 332 East 59th street. Dr. Von Offele, a chemist, said he grew the sunflowers because he admired Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas and because he felt the city was "too drab," even in midsummer. "The city needs such decoration," he said.

MRS. LANDON RESUMES VACATION IN COLORADO

Greeted by Children

Estes Park, Colo., July 25.—(AP)—Welcoming "Mommy" with shouts of glee, the 4 year old daughter and 2 year old son of Mrs. Alf M. Landon asked anxiously today if "Daddy" got their telegram saying that they heard his speech.

"We got it and daddy appreciated it very much," assured Mrs. Landon, sweeping them up, toys under their arms, for big hugs on her return to the vacation ranch from Topeka, where "Daddy" accepted the Republican nomination for President.

"We heard daddy talking on the radio and we wanted to say so," shouted Nancy Jo breathlessly, speaking for herself and Jack, who trailed along back of her, carefully guarding a toy fire engine.

The children were left at the ranch while Mrs. Landon went to Topeka to join her husband in the notification ceremonies.

ROBINSON BRANDS LANDON'S SPEECH 'MERE CLAPTRAP'

Melbourne, Ark., July 25.—(AP)—Senator Joseph Robinson [Dem., Ark.] today described Gov. Alf M. Landon's criticism of the Roosevelt administration as "mere claptrap." Robinson in a speech said the Republican presidential nominee "asserted commonplace political maxims with as much enthusiasm as if they represented new thought."

The majority leader of the senate said the Kansas governor's address made no definite suggestions for amending the social security act, but that "he contents himself with the general statement 'we shall amend the social security act to make it workable'."

Quoting Landon as saying the only way the constitution could be changed is in the orderly manner set forth in the document itself, the Arkansas senator commented:

"No one advocates usurpation of authority or violation of the constitution."

BORAH PRAISES LANDON SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE

Bellevue, Idaho, July 25.—(AP)—William E. Borah, Republican candidate for the sixth consecutive term in the United States senate, today said he "liked" Gov. Alf M. Landon's presidential nomination acceptance speech.

"I like the acceptance speech, more particularly because of its quiet elevation of tone and its singular freedom from mere attack on the opposition," he said.

"Of course, an acceptance speech cannot go into detail, but the general principles stated seemed to me assuring when details come to be dealt with."

F. LYNDON SMITH TO RUN HORNER'S DOWNSTATE RACE

Gov. Horner announced in Springfield yesterday that F. Lyndon Smith of Pontiac would manage his downstate campaign for reëlection. Smith held that post in the Democratic primary fight in which the governor defeated the candidate of the Cook county organization, Dr. H. N. Bundesen.

Asked about the governor's campaign in Chicago, Daniel Sullivan, Horner's political adviser, said that it was expected the Cook county central committee would function in that capacity "as it always has."

"County central committees always manage campaigns in the counties," Sullivan said, "the governor expects that they will continue to do so, in Chicago as well as downstate."

The governor is coming to Chicago today for conferences and will make a radio broadcast Tuesday night.

Townsendite to Make Race for Bertrand Snell's Seat

Ogdensburg, N. Y., July 25.—(AP)—Dr. J. W. Williams of Potsdam will enter the Republican primaries in opposition to Representative Bertrand H. Snell, minority leader in the house of representatives, Townsend headquarters announced here today. Snell also lives in Potsdam. Dr. Williams will represent Townsend clubs of the Thirty-first congressional district, but will enter the Republican primary instead of running on an Independent ticket as previously planned.

ILLINOIS YOUNG REPUBLICANS TO CONVENE TODAY

2,000 to Hear Brooks and Glenn at Peoria.

The Young Republicans of Illinois will hold their state convention in Peoria today to draft a platform, indorse state and national tickets and hear addresses by Wayland Brooks, candidate for governor, and Otis F. Glenn, candidate for United States senator.

More than 2,000 delegates are expected to attend the convention. The business sessions will be held in a downtown theater during the late morning and early afternoon and at 3 p. m., delegates and visitors will adjourn to the Peoria county fair grounds for a massmeeting and the speaking program. John T. Dempsey, one of the nominees for congressman at large, and Arthur J. Bidwill, nominee for state auditor, are listed to talk with Mr. Brooks, Mr. Glenn, and Mayor Edward N. Woodruff of Peoria.

State Ticket to Attend.

All of the state candidates are expected to attend the convention. The Young Republican movement will be represented by State Senator R. Kenneth Bradley of Connecticut, its national president.

Thomas J. Downs Jr. of Chicago is president of the Young Republican organization in Illinois and will call the business session to order at 10:30 a. m. It had been planned to convene in the Jefferson hotel, but continual increases in the anticipated number of delegates forced a change to a larger hall. The sessions will be held in the Majestic theater near the hotel.

Frederick W. Turner Jr., Chicago, will be temporary chairman and keynoter, and Evan Howell, Springfield, permanent chairman. Howell is also downstate director of Young Republican activities. Another Chicagoan, Ralph W. Ibenfeldt, is slated for chairman of the committee on the constitution.

Granata on Organization.

Walter Ackerman, Belleville, will be chairman of the committee on temporary organization and William John Granata, Chicago, of permanent organization. George B. Lee, Harrisburg, is expected to become chairman of rules and Ward C. Weist, Chicago, of credentials.

Word reaching the convention officials was that delegates can be expected from every county of the state, communities from Galena to Cairo. Most of the Chicago delegation will leave early today.

Joe Crosson, Noted Alaska 'Mercy' Flyer, Visits Here

Joe Crosson, famous for many far north "mercy" flights and the pilot who brought back the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post from Alaska, spent yesterday in Chicago on his return to Alaska from a business trip to New York City. While here he visited with Jimmie Mattern, who was a globe trotting companion of Post.

VANDENBERG, MURPHY TO LEAD TWO PARTIES' MICHIGAN CAMPAIGNS

Lansing, Mich., July 25.—[Special.]—Leaders of the state central committees of the two major parties revealed here today that U. S. Senator Arthur H. Vendenberg of Grand Rapids, the state's outstanding Republican spokesman, and Frank Murphy, former Detroit mayor and now a candidate for the Democratic governorship nomination, will bear the brunt of the speaking campaigns for their respective organizations.

Howard C. Lawrence, chairman of the Republican state central committee, said Senator Vandenberg plans to devote a large part of his time to Michigan engagements, speaking for the national committee prior to the September primary and after that in behalf of the entire Republican slate of state and national candidates.

It was revealed from Democratic headquarters here that Murphy, furloughed high commissioner of the Philippines, who was injected into the Michigan race by the Roosevelt leaders in hopes that he would bolster their chances of carrying the state, will start a strenuous campaign at once.

BLANTON, STORMY CONGRESSMAN OF TEXAS, TRAILING

Dallas, Tex., July 25.—[U. P.]—Representative Thomas L. Blanton, stormy figure in congress for 20 years, was trailing by almost 2,000 votes tonight for renomination as returns were counted from today's first Democratic primary.

The veteran Abilene congressman had 14,711 votes, compared to 16,074 for County Judge Clyde Garrett of Eastland, on the basis of partial returns from all 12 counties.

Gov. James V. Allred was leading his four opponents by 13,000 votes in incomplete returns from 155 counties. The governor had 136,905 votes. His nearest competitor, Tom Hunter, had 57,406. F. W. Fischer had 36,047; Roy Sanderford, 20,581, and Pierce Brooks, 8,869.

Senator Morris Sheppard of Texarkana in his campaign for reëlection held a majority of 152,385 votes. The "father of prohibition" had 188,851 as Representative Joe Eagle of Houston, nearest in pursuit, trailed with 36,566.

TEACH CITIZENS HOW TO REGISTER UNDER NEW LAW

Women Voters' League Issues Leaflets.

BY PERCY WOOD.

Citizens of Chicago and of nine other municipalities in Cook county which are under the jurisdiction of the Chicago election board will have their first opportunity on Aug. 4 to qualify as voters under the new honest elections law providing for permanent registration.

Continuing the campaign they have carried on for many years and which saw fruition last June when the legislature finally passed the bill, members of the Illinois League of Women Voters are now educating voters on how they may then register once and for all time—provided they do not move or change their names through marriage.

By means of a small, clearly worded leaflet the league is striving to show how easy it is to become registered permanently and is explaining voting technique once a voter is registered.

Open Every Week Day.

On every week day, from Aug. 4 through Oct. 5—save for Sept. 19—voters may register at the election board's office in the city hall. On Sept. 19 and Oct. 6, those who have been unable to go downtown may register at their precinct polling places.

The election board offices will be open from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. everyday except Sunday and Chicagoans and voters in the suburbs of Chicago Heights, Berwyn, Cicero, Elmwood Park, Evergreen Park, Harvey, Morton Grove, Stickney, and Summit may register there.

Nine downstate cities under election board control were also placed under permanent registration by the new law. They are Aurora, Bloomington, Cairo, Danville, East St. Louis, Galesburg, Peoria, Rockford, and Springfield. Registration in these cities will be held on Oct. 3 and Oct. 13.

Tells What to Do.

The League of Women Voters' leaflet explains that the voter must appear in person, must state his name, residence, term of residence in state, county and precinct and give the state or country of his birth. If he is a naturalized citizen, the court, place and date of his naturalization must be furnished.

Duplicate cards must then be signed, one of which will be kept in a master set in the offices of the election board and the other maintained in a special file which will be taken to the precinct on election days. Illiterates or persons unable to write because of physical disability may make their marks.

Must Sign for Ballot.

On Nov. 3, the next election day, those who have registered will sign a ballot requisition which signature must match that on the precinct card before a ballot will be issued.

"You need never again register unless you move or change your name by marriage or otherwise," the leaflet states. "In case you move, simply sign a card giving both old and new addresses and mail it to the board of election commissioners."

The Illinois League of Women Voters pioneered for a permanent registration law in Illinois, and, although the proposed enactments failed of passage session after session, efforts were renewed after each failure.

Officials of the league are expected to be in the board offices when registration opens at 9 a. m. Aug. 4, and a movement is on foot to have Gov. Horner, who supported the legislation at its passage last month and signed the bills, on hand to be the first to register.

Chauncey McCormick is chairman of the Citizens' Committee of Illinois which is handling the ceremonies.

CAMPAIGN ROLE OF WOMEN WINS LANDON INTEREST

Mrs. Wilma D. Hoyal, assistant chairman of the Republican national committee, returned to national headquarters from Topeka yesterday to report that Gov. Landon, the presidential nominee, is exhibiting a keen interest in the part women are playing in the campaign.

"The governor seemed eager for ideas of what women hope for from the national administration which will govern our destinies in the next four years," Mrs. Hoyal said. "I told him that they want a return to a stable form of government. They want the business security that means more and better jobs for all kinds of people, instead of disguised doles on which so many of them are existing."

Speaking of Gov. Landon's acceptance of his nomination, Mrs. Hoyal said, "Every person who heard him must have felt, as I did, that he was inviting us all to be his partners in solving the problem of giving America back to the American people."

Brookhart Nominated by Farmer-Labor Party.

Des Moines, Ia., July 25.—[Special.]—Berry Halden of Chariton, editor and American Legion leader, was named the Republican nominee for the short term United States senatorial nomination by the state convention late this afternoon.

The Democratic candidate is Representative Guy M. Gillette, nominated last Thursday.

Halden polled but 50 votes on the first ballot and slightly more than 400 on the fourth, but a stampede gave him more than 1,600 votes on the fifth. Only 1,506 votes were needed to name a candidate.

Gillette and Halden will run for the seat made vacant by the death of Senator Louis Murphy in an auto accident in Wisconsin two weeks ago.

32 in Nomination Race.

Halden, although not widely known in the state, is chairman of the state American Legion committee on patriotism, and has delivered the keynote speeches at various Republican gatherings.

In the first two ballots here today, James Rhodes, Newton publisher, had a slight advantage. On the third and fourth ballots, however, Guy P. Linville, Cedar Rapids attorney and an unsuccessful candidate in the June primaries for the long term senatorial seat, took the front. Linville lacked but 127 votes for nomination at the end of the fourth voting.

Labor Party Names Brookhart.

While the Republicans were meeting in one section of the city, the state Farmer-Labor party delegates met in another and nominated Smith Wildman Brookhart, former senator and a storm center of the Republican party for the last 10 years, as their standard bearer. Brookhart unsuccessfully sought the G. O. P. nomination in the June primaries.

Brookhart, until recently a member of the New Deal farm organization, Washington, D. C., was located vacationing in Maryland. He refused to make known his decision concerning the Farmer-Labor nomination. He was named on the first ballot.

Colorado Democrats Pick U. S. Senate Candidates

Denver, Col., July 25.—(AP)—Colorado Democrats designated their senatorial and state tickets for the September primary election today in a turbulent state assembly that was halted several times as dissention flared. Gov. Ed C. Johnson and former Gov. William E. Sweet were designated for the primary race for the United States senatorship after charges that Sweet had deserted the Democratic party in 1928 had been aired and a heckler of Johnson had been ejected from the gallery.

CIGARET SETS BOAT AFIRE.

A lighted cigaret, carelessly thrown by a pedestrian from the upper level of the Michigan avenue bridge, yesterday set fire to a tarpaulin cover of a speed boat moored at the northwest side of the bridge.

TODAY'S PROBLEM

by CALEB

"WITH the working people, again, it is not so well. Unlucky! For there are from twenty to twenty-five millions of them. Whom, however, we lump together . . . as 'the masses.' Masses, indeed: and yet, singular to say, if, with an effort of imagination, thou follow them over broad France, into their clay hovels, into their garrets and hutches, the masses consist all of units. Every unit of whom has his heart and sorrows: stands covered there with his own skin, and if you prick him he will bleed. . . . What a thought: that every unit of these masses is a miraculous Man . . . struggling, with vision or with blindness, for his infinite Kingdom (this life which he has got, once only, in the middle of Eternities) with a spark of the Divinity, what thou callest an immortal soul, in him."—Carlyle.

There is too much suffering in the world. Too many people have too hard a time. Not in the sense of obstacles to overcome—or in the necessity of labor to be performed for one's way to be earned. Obstacles are humanity's birthright and are good for us—and strength does not come from ease. But in a world rich in resources—there is small excuse for persisting poverty among people who are willing to work.

The greatest problem the next generations in this world will face will be social problems. Lightning-like communication, fast transportation, great publications, radio, moving pictures—these have made the world small. All people now know of the better things of the earth.

Business men, who have blanketed the world with advertising which brings wants to life, must assume responsibility to help more people earn money to satisfy those wants. The more quickly privileged people learn completely what is behind the plight of the unfortunate—the more quickly will our social problems be solved.

Legislation and economic reforms are never more than helpful palliatives unless they follow the heart. That which legislation forces the world to do for its needy will ever be done wastefully. It will also be done and received in bad spirit. Good wages forced by class war and strife accomplish less than good wages paid because it is profitable and human to pay them.

In the long run, relief for the underprivileged must be the result of a world in which we learn to spread privilege more widely. It is better to help people to earn all they need than to deprive them of that opportunity, only to inadequately relieve their needs with charity.

Business is learning to accelerate evolution by remembering the crowd. They, too, dream. They must have succor from those whose horizons are broader. It is an unworthy circle of aims which encompasses too few people.

LEADERS AGREE CONSTITUTION IS SUPREME ISSUE

Candidates Recognize It in Statements.

ities of sovereignty which could not be separated from a federal government if such a federal government was permanently to endure."

The President intimated his confidence that an interpretation of the constitution more favorable to the New Deal will yet be forthcoming from the Supreme court.

"The constitution," he said, "provided the best instrument ever devised for the continuation of these fundamental principles. Under its broad purposes we can and intend to march forward, believing as the overwhelming majority of Americans believe, that it is intended to meet and fit the amazing physical, economic, and social requirements that confront us in this generation."

Wallace's Views Revealed.

How this more favorable construction of the constitution can be brought about Secretary of Agriculture Wallace explains in an introduction he wrote to Irving Brant's "Storm Over the Constitution." Brant, like Mr. Roosevelt, "believes that the constitution as written," says Mr. Wallace, "is sufficiently broad to meet the present complex economic situation."

"The important thing, therefore, under the Brant thesis," Mr. Wallace continues, "is to elect Presidents who will nominate the right men to the Supreme court. Adequate powers are in the constitution, provided adequate men are named to the court. Reactionary Presidents all too often mean reactionary judges."

In his own book, "Whose Constitution," Mr. Wallace says that "unity in the name of the general welfare has all too long been delayed by those who have made the theory of states rights a refuge for anti-social activities. If the United States is to assume her destiny in the family of nations, there must of necessity be more centralization of certain types of policy making and more decentralization of certain types of administrative responsibility."

Favors Coöperative State.

Mr. Wallace advocates the coöperative state "as distinguished from free competition" for the restoration and preservation of which Gov. Landon contends. Mr. Roosevelt recently sent a New Deal commission to Sweden to study coöperative undertakings.

"The only way," says Mr. Wallace, "in which democracy can survive the logical onslaught of the dictator-state aspect of communism and fascism is to develop the genuine coöperative ideal to the limit. The coöperative way of life must pervade the community and this means there must be consumers' coöperatives as well as producers' coöperatives. To live happily in a coöperative society takes an entirely different attitude of mind from that required in a society where free competition is the dominating rule. I am inclined to think that by nature most men are a little better adapted to the coöperative form of society than to the competitive form."

Hints Change of Mind.

If big business, as Mr. Wallace sees the situation, fails "to understand the signs of the times," an amendment of the constitution will be necessary. But if it bows to the necessity "for making certain fundamental changes in order to preserve the general welfare" no constitutional changes will be required. The hint is that the Supreme court would change its mind.

"In various countries of the world in the past," Mr. Wallace ominously remarks "privileged classes have often acted in such a way as to make gradual change impossible and have precipitated violent action."

The New Deal's expectation of a more favorable construction of the constitution in the next four years was further presented by Solicitor General Stanley Reed in a recent speech. Mr. Reed asserted that the framers of the constitution "intended it as a statement of principles upon which the government should operate into the indefinite future, not a code of laws written to meet the needs of an existing and well understood condition."

Trusts in Interpretation.

Mr. Reed placed more trust in interpretation of the constitution than in amendment thereof.

"It will be an unfortunate day," he said, "if there is ever general agreement that the nation's exercise of federal power has reached its limit; that further changes, however desirable or needed, cannot be accomplished, without the uncertainties, delays and difficulties of fundamental constitutional amendments."

The solicitor general said that "a reservoir of unused power, of indeterminate area, remains to the federal government within the limits of the delegated powers."

Cases Are Cited.

"This area," he went on, "becomes one which is broad indeed when viewed together with the scope of the implied powers which may be necessary to make fully effectual the expressly granted powers. As implied powers may be derived from implied powers, Ruppert vs. Caffey, 251 U. S. 264, 299, an even wider range for legislation is opened. The result is, as Justice Holmes, speaking for the court in Missouri vs. Holland, 252 U. S. 416, has phrased it, that 'in matters requiring national action, it is not lightly to be assumed that "a power which must belong to and somewhere reside in every civilized government" is not to be found.'"

Much as he regretted the government's loss of the AAA case Mr. Reed found cause for hope in the court's remarks on the "wide range of discretion permitted to the congress."

"It would not be surprising," he said, "if from this holding of United States vs. Butler, 279 U. S. 1, supplemented as it is by the vigorous and cogent reasoning of Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo, there will flow an important line of decisions validating federal legislation in the fields of agriculture, social welfare and labor relations. Such a development is believed by many essential to preserve the true spirit of American constitutional government in the changing phases of national life.

Sees Agreement on Goal.

"Few dissent from the ultimate aim of social and economic legislation of the past few years. Old age and unemployment assistance, relief to distress, aid to labor in its struggle for recognition, bank insurance, the protection of investors, wide dissemination of opportunities for the utilization of electric power, the protection of children, have a strong appeal to the mind and heart of America.

"Surely the founding fathers, who provided for federal control of commerce with the Indians, who limited the importation of slaves, protected the citizens against the abuses of the writ of habeas corpus, safeguarded contracts, protected property from seizure for government use and the citizen from arbitrary punishment for crime, could not have intended their government to be helpless in the emergencies of today.

"We have attained political freedom. We move toward social justice. It cannot be that the effort to attain that ideal may be fairly pilloried as contrary to the constitution or as subversive of the American system of government.

"Rigid Limits" Opposed.

"The opportunity and the necessity for the government's services to its people cannot be confined within rigid limits. The constitution sets no such bounds. It is a living, vital institution whose function is to guide and not to curb necessary governmental processes. So to construe and apply our organic law, to adapt its powers to the great ideal of social justice for the governed, is truly to preserve, to protect and to defend the constitution of our United States."

NEW WAUKEGAN CITY HALL READY AFTER 8 YEARS

Waukegan aldermen moved into their new city hall at Utica and Madison streets yesterday, marking the final chapter in eight years of litigation. The new offices will be open for business tomorrow.

Eight years ago the city purchased a building known as the old Higley residence as its new official home for $100,000. A taxpayers' organization objected, on the ground that there had been no referendum, and started suit to cancel the contract. A new city administration later joined the objectors.

This year the Illinois Supreme court finally upheld the legality of the original contract. By this time, however, the cost of the new hall to Waukegan has mounted to $230,000, including the purchase price, rent on the temporary city hall, court costs, renovation, and the cost of moving.

PENNSYLVANIA RELIEF PICKETS RALLY FORCES

Harrisburg, Pa., July 25.—(AP)—Pickets "holding" the state house in their demand for 100 million dollars for relief of the unemployed rallied their forces today with the cry:

"Chase the reactionaries out of the capitol Monday night."

State police estimated 200 men, women and some children occupied the senate gallery for the fourth day. They slept there again last night.

Police said probably another 200 were scattered through Capitol park or at the farm show building.

Leaders of the self-styled "militant jobless army" predicted that by Monday night additional delegations would come "by the thousands."

Reno, Nev., July 25.—(AP)—Allan Jones, singing star of the motion picture, "Show Boat," was divorced today by Mrs. Marjorie B. Jones. Cruelty was charged.

A property settlement, reached last June 6, was ordered sealed by the court. Custody of a son, Theodore, 6, was settled in that agreement.

According to Hollywood reports, Irene Hervey, actress, last Wednesday filed a notice of intention to marry Jones. When she appeared at the license bureau she said Jones was busy at his studio and that they wanted to be married "over the week-end."

JERSEY RELIEF BURDEN IS CUT BY LOCAL RULE

Newark, N. J., July 25.—[Special.]—About 25,000 relief cases, representing from 75,000 to 100,000 men, women, and children, have been dropped from the rolls in New Jersey since the state turned administration of direct relief back to the municipalities on April 15, it was learned today.

This represents a minimum saving at the rate of $7,500,000 a year, about one-third of total relief costs under state administration.

There are now estimated to be 50,000 cases on direct relief throughout the state, according to a survey made by the Works Progress administration headquarters here in connection with one of its federal projects.

Reports show that the average cost of relief was more than $25 a month a case during 1935 and early 1936, until it ceased operation. Applied to the reduction of 25,000 cases, this means an approximate reduction in costs at the rate of $625,000 a month.

'QUODDY, FLORIDA CANAL TO REMAIN HALF COMPLETED

New Dealers to Abandon Ambitious Projects.

Washington, D. C., July 25.—[Special.]—The Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal power project in Maine, begun with such brave announcements from the New Deal, will be abandoned in mid-construction on Aug. 1.

At 'Quoddy the departing workmen will leave behind a punctured boom. In Florida only the gaping excavations and a corps of army engineers making one last survey will remain as souvenirs of the undertaking.

The war department said definitly today that there was nothing in sight to premit the work being carried on after July 31. The question now confronting them is what to do with a quarter-built canal and a half-built tidal power project, complete with comfortable workmen's village decorated in the colonial style.

A Maine Bubble Bursts.

The 'Quoddy project is proving the most difficult to dispose of. The prospect of its construction was a tremendous boon to the business life of the countryside around Eastport, Me. A local boom developed very rapidly, and, such was the faith of the Eastporters in the ability of the New Deal to carry through the project in the face of congressional opposition, it continued to grow almost until the project's death sentence toward the close of the session.

Now it has collapsed, leaving the countryside worse off than it was before 'Quoddy came.

Small Staf to Remain.

Until some definite decision is made the war department will keep a small maintenance staf in 'Quoddy village to watch over what has been already built. The department experts say the uncompleted sections of the tidal power project itself are perfectly safe and will remain unharmed until a day comes, if it ever does, when congress is willing to resume the work on 'Quoddy.

That is the great riddle both at 'Quoddy and the canal. With the hope, perhaps, of bringing the day a little nearer, a new survey is being undertaken of the canal and its potentialities. The war department denies it is being done either at the order or request of President Roosevelt, who initiated both projects on his personal responsibility.

The survey, which will cost $25,000 to $30,000, will be paid for out of the general rivers and harbors appropriation.

60 Die of Pneumonia and Dysentery in Philippines

MANILA, P. I., July 25.—(AP)—Sixty fatalities reported in an epidemic of dysentery and bronchial pneumonia in Pangasinan province caused commonwealth health officials to rush to that area today, on the west central coast of Luzon Island.

BISHOP DEFENDS COUGHLIN ON HIS ARRIVAL IN ROME

Asserts Vatican Will Not Take Hand in Matter.

ROME, July 25.—(AP)—Bishop Michael Gallagher of Detroit asserted tonight Father Charles E. Coughlin's political activity is a matter "entirely of my own supervision and not one in which the Vatican would take any initiative."

"I have no complaint against Father Coughlin for his political activities and approve much of his argument," the bishop said. "There is absolutely no controversy between Father Coughlin and myself."

The bishop declared he would tell Pope Pius—if the pontiff as supreme head of the Catholic church should inquire about the priest—"Father Coughlin speaks for the people."

Defends Priest's Right.

The ecclesiastical head of the diocese of Detroit, on his arrival in Rome from Naples, defended Father Coughlin's right to engage in political discussions as well as personally indorsing the priest's views.

"I cannot speak against Father Coughlin," he said in denying the Vatican had intervened in the controversy resulting from the priest's characterization of President Roosevelt as a "liar," a declaration for which he later publicly apologized.

Father Coughlin is against President Roosevelt, the bishop declared, because the President "did not keep faith with his promises."

Takes Responsibility Himself.

"The head of all priests in the diocese of Detroit is myself," Bishop Gallagher said. "It must therefore be for myself to make observations about Father Coughlin, not the Vatican."

When his ship docked at Naples earlier, the bishop declared he had come to Italy "absolutely for a rest."

"Above all the trip gives me an opportunity to visit the pope upon the occasion of his celebration of his 80th year of life," he added.

Of his subordinate, the radio priest, he said:

"He said some very just things and very acute things, and because his priestly mission is exactly that, he is occupying himself with the needs of the people."

Coughlin Pleased.

Buffalo, N. Y., July 25.—(AP)—Father Charles E. Coughlin expressed happiness tonight over the statement of his ecclesiastical superior, Bishop Michael Gallagher of Detroit, in Rome, who said that he "could not speak against Father Coughlin."

"Bishop Gallagher," Father Coughlin said, "went to Rome for a vacation, just as he has done for years."

Turning to other subjects, Father Coughlin predicted that an electoral college deadlock would force the election of a President and Vice President into the laps of congress.

The radio priest told newspaper men the Union party and its candidate for the presidency, Representative William Lemke of North Dakota, would gain enough elctoral votes to keep either the Republican or the Democratic parties from a majority in the electoral college.

Seeks Lehman's Defeat.

"The Republican party is rapidly qualifying for a place in a museum," he said. "As for the Democratic party, it has altered the spelling of its name until it is now spelled 'socialism.'"

The Union party, Father Coughlin said, does not expect to offer a governorship candidate in New York state but will work, nevertheless, to defeat Gov. Herbert H. Lehman.

"One reason for Gov. Lehman's defeat will be the high tax rate," the priest said. "Another will be his veto of the school bus bill. And thirdly, there is the fact that he is too closely identified with the little street down in New York at the end of which they used to sell slaves."

Father Coughlin came here to address his followers in an open-air rally at Hamburg, Buffalo suburb, this afternoon.

RIDICULES REPORTS

In Chicago last night on his way to fill a speaking engagement today in Hankinson, N. D., the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin said the newspapers of the United States have been made "the laughing stock of the whole Catholic world" as a result of reports that Pope Pius might censure him for calling President Roosevelt a "liar."

Referring to dispatches that there had been a telephone call between Detroit and Rome a result of the incident, Father Coughlin said if there were a communication to Rome "it would not be a telephone call, it would be a letter triply sealed."

Departs Hour Later.

The radio priest said he was sorry the press had been fooled, and remarked that he thought the erroneous dispatches originated in the mind of a "jazzy" Detroit newspaper man.

Father Coughlin arrived in Chicago at 8:40 p. m. on an American Airlines plane from Buffalo, N. Y., and departed an hour later on a Northwest Airlines ship. He will confer today with his candidate for the presidency, William Lemke, nominee of the Union party, which is named for Coughlin's National Union for Social Justice. Father Coughlin said he planned to fly back to his Detroit home this evening.

Dr. Johnson, School Chief, Takes Baby for Adoption

William H. Johnson, superintendent of schools, and his wife announced yesterday their intention to adopt a girl baby, 3 months old, from a Chicago family. The child was taken to the Johnson home at 914 Lafayette street yesterday. They have named her Patricia Joyce, according to announcements received by friends yesterday. The Johnsons have no other children.

ACTOR SUES FILM FIRM CHIEF OVER ALLEGED BEATING

Los Angeles, Cal., July 25.—(AP)—Pietro Gentili, movie operatic singer and actor, accused Harry Cohn, president of Columbia Pictures corporation, in a $100,000 damage suit today of helping beat him up.

"I'm not a regular attendant at the opera," Cohn said, "so I don't know if this Gentili person is a tenor or a bass, but I do know he sounds very much off key."

Gentili charged that Cohn, "laboring under the delusion and hallucination that the plaintiff caused friction in the defendant's household, maliciously and brutally pounded and battered him last Aug. 1 at the Gentili home."

Cohn ordered two unidentified companions to "kill" him, Gentili's complaint declared. Thereafter, Gentili alleged, Cohn "blacklisted" him at motion picture studios.

SHOPLIFTER SEIZED.

Willard Soehlman, 32 years old, 1855 West Monroe street, was arrested last night as he was about to leave the Wieboldt store, 818 Davis street, Evanston, with six suits of men's clothing in his arms.

PATTERN OF LIGHTS 'PLAYS' SONG WITHOUT SOUND BEING MADE

Tallahasse, Fla., July 25. — (AP) — No sound was heard, no words were reproduced, but members of an audience here were quick to recognize that the song "Suwannee River" had just been "played."

Dr. Christian Paul Heinlein, professor of experimental psychology at Florida State College for Women, was demonstrating his newest invention, an instrument he calls a "visiometer." The song was presented in a moving pattern of lights, the intensity of which was controled by an electric eye.

Dr. Heinlein said he believed the instrument might be used in reception of music by deaf persons. "A person who had hearing at one time and had gone deaf, provided he had an appreciation of tone and musical progress, could quite readily appreciate light sequences," he explained.

FARLEY EXPECTS LOSS OF HOUSE SEATS TO G. O. P.

Republicans Predict Gain in Senate Strength.

Washington, D. C., July 25.—[Special.]—Gains of two senate seats, but losses in the present overwhelming house majority in the November election were forecast today by Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic national committee.

In contrast to this prediction, Senator John G. Townsend of Delaware, a member of the Republican senatorial committee, said that if "the present opposition" to the administration continues to grow, the Republicans will win at least three senate seats—in Massachusetts, Colorado, and Illinois.

Farley declined to designate the senate seats that are in doubt, and would not say in what sections of the country he expected losses in the house elections.

See Loss to Lemke.

The Union party, combining the support of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin and Dr. F. E. Townsend behind Representative William Lemke, is expected by some Democratic leaders to bring about defeat of some Democratic candidates in the northwestern tier of states.

Commenting upon Lemke's candidacy, Charles Michelson, director of publicity for the Democratic national committee, today said:

"But so far as the pending campaign is concerned, any conspicuous consequence of his candidacy is most unlikely, to put it mildly. That candidacy and the other influences coordinated with it possibly may swing a congressional seat here and there, but what can that amount to in a body where one party has an overwhelming, even an unwieldy, majority?"

185 House Contests.

The Republican congressional campaign committee headed by Representative Chester C. Bolton will devote especial attention to 185 house contests. These are districts which formerly were Republican and which were carried in 1932 and 1934 in the Democratic sweep. With another party in the field, the Republicans foresee success in many districts. The most optimistic Republican workers feel that if the Democratic majority can be reduced to forty, the minority party, by combining with conservative Democrats in the next session, can prevent much legislation.

"Practically all the territory we lost in 1932 and in 1934 is leaning strongly Republican," Mr. Bolton added. "It is too early to speak specifically of congressional districts. Many of our candidates have not yet been nominated, but those who have so far been named are convinced that the Republicans will regain control of the house.

"Committee reports indicate that we should regain everything in New England that we lost in 1932 and 1934.

G. O. P. Gains Seen in West.

"Our opponents have widely advertised the middle west as the 'worst spot' for Republicans. The contrary is true. All our reports show a marked trend of a reversal of sentiment in the midwest block of states. In fact, the reversal of sentiment is overwhelming in the midwest. We should have a clean sweep in Kansas; Nebraska and Iowa undoubtedly will be back in the Republican column, and we will pick up a big bloc of seats there.

"Downstate Illinois has been traditionally Republican and we expect substantial gains in congress in Illinois. Montana, which was swept by the 1932 landslide, is coming back to Republicanism fast. We have similar reports from other states in the northwestern group.

"In Michigan the trend is increasingly Republican, and is the more so after the recent confession of weakness on the part of the New Deal in persuading Mr. Murphy to run for governor. We already hold eleven of the seventeen congressional seats in Michigan and in 1934, before the ground swell of opposition to the New Deal had developed, we succeeded in picking up four seats in Michigan.

Ohio Trend Republican.

"The trend is all our way in Ohio and if the election were held today we would pick up not less than ten house seats in that state. These are in addition to the six we already hold, and with the trend so obviously Republican the chances for even greater success in Ohio are enhanced.

"We have similar reports from other states. This is especially so in Maine where the New Deal rapidly is losing ground. There should be little difficulty in electing all three Republicans in the congressional districts and in reëlecting Senator Wallace White."

Arch for Gen. Wood

A memorial archway for Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, founder of the Plattsburg, N. Y., preparedness camp, will be dedicated on Tuesday at Fort Sheridan, and the citizens' military training camp there will be named Camp Leonard Wood.

This memorial archway is the first to be raised in honor of Gen. Wood in the nation-wide movement to recognize the general's efforts in behalf of national defense, according to Charles B. Pike, president of the Military Training Camps association. This group joined with the Chicago Historical society, the CMTC and the historic sites committee to erect the archway.

Among the speakers at the dedication ceremonies will be Maj. Gen. Charles E. Kilbourne, commander of the 6th corps [Chicago] area, and Col. Thomas R. Gowenlock, who were close friends and associates of Gen. Wood. The camp will be open to inspection by visitors after the ceremonies. Brig. Gen. Dana T. Merrill, commandant of the post, reviewed the CMTC yesterday before a crowd of 2,000 visitors.

Women's Program Opens Today at Methodist Camp

The women's institute program of the Methodist summer assembly and camp meetings at Des Plaines will open today with many veteran women workers in attendance. Among them will be Mrs. Julia Verity Ingram, who has attended all of the 77 summer camp meetings, and Mrs. Olive Allison, who is spending her 75th summer at the camp. Mrs. Ingram yesterday attributed the successful growth of the camp to the activities of the women.

"They have kept house, cared for the children and their husbands and have swelled the crowds at the meetings," she said.

Filter Concern Head Sued for $200,000 Heart Balm

Miss Helen Wolff, 39 years old, filed suit for $200,000 breach of promise in the Superior court yesterday against Philip N. Engel, 1725 East 53d street, president of the International Filter company, 59 East Van Buren street. Prior to July 1, 1935, when heart balm suits were outlawed by the state legislature, Miss Wolff's suit charges she and Engel had a contract to marry. He voided the contract last June 20 by marrying Miss Dorothy Phillips, the bill alleges. Attorney Moses Levitan, who filed the bill, refused to give Miss Wolff's address.

REPORT BIG GAIN IN BUSINESS AT CHICAGO AIRPORT

Chicago's municipal airport, already the busiest in the world, strengthened its leadership in the six month period ending June 30, Commissioner of Public Works Oscar E. Hewett announced yesterday in making public the trafic figures for passengers, mail, and express.

There were 7,404 scheduled arrivals and 7,453 scheduled departures of passenger planes, compared with 5,851 arrivals and 6,016 departures in the same period last year, an increase of 26.9 per cent in arrivals and 23.8 per cent in departures.

Passenger trafic increased almost 34 per cent, with 48,762 passenger arrivals and 50,083 departures. Air mail poundage clearing the port since Jan. 1 was 1,381,271, an increase of 37 per cent over the same period last year. Express increased from 275,653 pounds last year to 296,541 pounds in the first six months of this year.

ROOSEVELT ENDS 30 MILE CRUISE AFTER FOG LIFTS

Sails to Anchorage Across Bay of Fundy.

BY WALTER TROHAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ABOARD SCHOONER LIBERTY, OFF GRAND MANAN, N. B., July 25.—[Special.]—With a firm hand on the helm, President Roosevelt this evening guided the schooner Sewanna into anchorage in Neal cove off the southern tip of Grand Manan island.

A 30 mile dash across the Bay of Fundy ended eight days of cruising off Nova Scotia and brought the President a few miles from Maine waters.

The run from Westport, N. S., to the New Brunswick island was made in four and a half hours behind a steady wind after fog lifted shortly after noon over last night's anchorage.

Fog Keeps President in Bunk.

Dawn had found the Sewanna fogfound. The fog was so dense that the bow of the schooner could not be seen from the helm. A driving rain washed her decks.

Toward mid-morning the fog lifted in the passage, but held out to sea. There was no wind. Because of the unfavorable weather conditions, the President was not awakened, but was left to enjoy the warmth of his bunk during the raw morning.

Throughout the morning his crew—sons James, Franklin Jr., and John—waited for a chance to get under way. The weather was too thick for negotiation of the treacherous passage, which was made in a white-capped sea against a four knot tide yesterday evening to give Mr. Roosevelt his most thrilling sailing of the cruise.

Task for Secret Service Man.

Through the night a patrol boat of secret service men was forced virtually to scrape the side of the Sewanna in order to keep the craft in sight. The patrol is maintained at evening anchorage.

At the mouth of the passage stood the destroyer Hopkins, which did not attempt the tricky, narrow passage, advising the Sewanna of weather conditions out to sea by radio.

At Grand Manan Island the fleet has rendezvous tomorrow with navy seaplanes carrying mail from Washington. From the island the bow of the Sewanna will point toward Campobello Island, where his mother has a summer home.

Considers Some Fishing.

The President is scheduled to arrive at Campobello on Tuesday, to rest two days before making his visit to Quebec, but may move his arrival up a day if the weather is unfavorable. If skies are clear tomorrow Mr. Roosevelt may go aboard the fishing boat carried by the presidential yacht Potomac and try his luck again.

At Campobello, son James will leave the Sewanna for his Boston home. Sons Franklin Jr., and John will sail the schooner back to Gloucester, Mass.

GOULD HEIRESS IS BETROTHED TO AD SOLICITOR

Roxbury, N. Y., July 25.—(AP)—The engagement of Helen Anna Shepard, a prospective heiress of the Jay Gould millions, and Arthur Harris Gaines, newspaper advertising solicitor, was announced today.

Miss Shepard is one of the three children adopted by Finley Johnson Shepard and his wife, the former Helen Gould, daughter of the man who was born here 100 years ago and became the foremost builder of American railroads in the 19th century.

Gaines, son of Mr. and Mrs. Le Grand Gaines of Texarkana, Tex., is an advertising solicitor on the New York Daily News.

Labor Act Perils Press Freedom, Asserts Hanson

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Old Point Comfort, Va., July 25.—[Special.]—"The national labor relations act reeks of Hitlerism at its very worst, and other New Deal acts aimed at fettering the freedom of the press smack of dictatorship," Elisha Hanson, general counsel of the American Newspaper Publishers' association, declared here tonight.

Speaking before the Virginia Press association, Hanson asserted that a free press was "the bulwark of all our liberties." He urged his hearers to be constantly vigilant to prevent any direct restrictions on the press and ever on the alert to weed out governmental propaganda.

Singling out the NLR act for attack, Hanson charged that it contained a distinct threat to the freedom of the press.

Press Freedom Threatened.

"This law purports to give employés not only the right to organize for purposes of collective bargaining, but for other and undefined purposes, as well," said Hanson. "Then the law penalizes employers who refuse to bargain with their employés or who are found guilty of discriminating against or discharging any employé because of his activities in connection with a labor organization.

"If it be conceded that any agency of the government has the right to compel a newspaper or even the right to try to compel a newspaper to maintain in its employ either a news or editorial writer in whom it has lost confidence, then the government will have provided a means through which it may exercise direct control over the gathering and dissemination of information and the expression of opinion by the press.

Fines Peril Employé.

"Under the sweeping provisions of the act employés can organize for the purpose of seizing control of the news and editorial policies of their employers. They can demand as a part of their collective bargaining the surrender of such control. And, if discharged, as they should be in such a case, the employer is subject to an order to reëmploy them, failing which fines and other penalties can be imposed."

The press, Hanson said, was the only medium for the dissemination of information and opinion that is not subject to some form of government control. Radio, he charged, because it was licensed by the government, was always on "good behavior and good behavior is just what a politically appointed licensing authority prescribes."

Hanson Scores Burocracy.

Hanson also struck against various burocratic heads of the government.

Harry Hopkins, WPA chief, had recently clamped down the lid in his bureau and ordered that no more information be given except to persons on official business because he was embarrassed over the revelations of graft and corruption, Hanson said.

Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, and other cabinet officials had threatened, according to Hanson, to dismiss any subordinate who gave out any information except through the department's information division.

Thunder in Los Angeles; Second Time in a Month

Los Angeles, Cal., July 25.—[Special.]—The second Los Angeles thunderstorm in a month sent the heavens booming today, but the rainfall was light. Heavier showers were reported in the Hollywood hills and the Santa Monica mountains.

CHICAGO SUMMER SCHOOLS RICH IN CULTURAL MERIT

Diffuse Knowledge to Ends of Nation.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

Chicago's summer industry, richest in abiding dividends, is the summer schools of its four universities and its art school.

That industry brings more cultural fame to our city than do any other of its activities during the months of June, July, and August. It diffuses instruction and inspiration throughout the nation. It serves more than 12,000 eager, impressionable, hard working, serious minded young students and mature students who never will forget what they here learned, what they saw, and whom they met. The majority of them come to us from cities and villages in every state in the Union and from many foreign lands. What they acquire here they carry home to pour forth in ever widening circles.

Teachers Come for Learning.

They are mostly teachers who come to be taught and who return to teach what they have been taught. Activities in hundreds of American and foreign public schools, and in academies and colleges that Chicago never heard of are given new directions and wider scope by teachers to whom Chicago annually is host for three months.

The five schools give a total of thirty-six concurrent weeks of teaching—University of Chicago ten, Northwestern seven, Loyola seven, De Paul six; and the art school of the Art institute six.

They bring to us at a cost of nearly $100,000 dozens of guest teachers who are eminent in the field of education.

Dr. Hahne Explains System.

A phase of the significance of this bringing on of guest teachers from other universities was tellingly described by Dr. Ernest Herman Hahne, director of the summer session at Northwestern and associate professor of economics there.

"Instead," said the director, "of advising a summer student to go elsewhere to study under a master eminent in some special field—like Princeton's great authority on Elizabethan dramatists, Thomas Marc Parrott—we bring the master here for seven weeks. We do this for two reasons. We not only want him to teach our students, we also want to bring our faculty in contact with him. Hence long after his departure his visit to this campus will remain an inspiration."

60 Teach Here This Summer.

Of such men—not that all are of the eminence of Prof. Parrott—Northwestern brings in sixty this summer and pays them from $800 to $1,200 each for their tarrying.

Nor are the visiting lecturers solely academic figures. The university also presents as lecturers on special topics leaders in public life, in industry, in exploration, in invention, in literature, and in the art of the theater, many of whom account it a privilege to address the classes without fee.

The response of students to Chicago's summer schools—or "summer sessions" as the pundits prefer to have them called—makes dazzling statistics.

Enrollment of students this summer is:

University of Chicago	4,307
Northwestern university	3,854
De Paul university	2,721
Loyola university	1,238
Art institute's art school	413
	12,533

The popularity of our summer sessions grows emphatically.

Northwestern now has 768 more students than last summer, De Paul 335 more, Chicago nearly 200 more, Loyola 62 more, and—in one department alone, its painting class which studies at picturesque Saugatuck, Mich.—the Art institute's enrollment has doubled. Northwestern's enrollment has increased 70 per cent since the summer of 1933.

Come from Near and Far.

Whence come these more than 12,000 who are with us this summer?

To Northwestern from every state in the Union and many foreign countries; to Chicago the same; to De Paul from sixty-four towns in Illinois, from Massachusetts on the east and Texas on the west, and one student from Persia; and to the Art institute's school, 133 from "out of town"—many from the south and west, especially Texas.

Again "mere statistics" show the tremendous scope of the work: Chicago offers 625 courses, taught by a faculty numbering 425; Northwestern more than 300 courses, taught by 242 resident and guest professors.

Northwestern's summer school—seven weeks—costs it $200,000 and is a profit maker, turning in last year to the university treasury $10,000—this despite the fact that the university charged overhead against it. This profit derives from tuition fees, which run from $55 to $60 per student, depending in part on the course he takes.

Scholars Give Services Free.

It is impossible to offer fair figures on what the summer sessions at Loyola and De Paul would cost if they were secular universities, because so much of the teaching there is truly consecrated free service, performed in many instances by fine scholars who consider simple food, raiment, and shelter ample compensation.

Nor can exact figures be given on the cost of the University of Chicago's summer school—ten weeks—because that vast powerhouse operates under full pressure all the year around. Its budget is $8,000,000 for the fifty-two weeks of a year. "As ten weeks are to 52 weeks," said John Howe, the university's publicist, "so is the cost of our summer session to $8,000,000. Do your own ciphering."

The Art institute spends $12,000 on its summer school and its summer faculty numbers eighteen.

Being a trustful soul, I thought that the extraordinary number of women—invariably in excess of the number of men—enrolled in the five summer schools, meant that the American woman is more ardent for higher education than the man is. To an extent that is true, but there is a catch in the truth.

Most Students Are Teachers.

The majority of students at summer sessions are teachers, and the majority of teachers in the public schools are women. Now a teacher cannot get forward in the American public school system unless he—or she—has had university training. In some states such training is required by statute. Hence, there being more women teachers than men teachers, there are more women than men coming to be taught at the summer sessions. Partly it is ardor for learning and partly a lively ambition to become equipped for a better paid position.

But again there is a catch. For at De Paul and Loyola, where both professors and students do their work in the spirit of ad majorem Dei gloriam instead of with an eye to more money, the number of women students far exceeds the number of men. Of the total enrollment of 2,721 students at De Paul, which is the largest Roman Catholic summer school in America, 1,878 are women and of these women 1,289 are nuns and 589 are seculars. In Loyola's total enrollment of 1,238, the women number 781, and of these women 394 are nuns and 387 are seculars. Of the men students, seven are clergymen, 171 are members of religious orders, and 279 are of the laity.

Women Students Predominate.

At the Art institute's summer school 325 of the students are women and eighty-eight are men.

Among the ten guest teachers whom De Paul brings to Chicago this summer are the Rev. Father F. H. Slavin, Order of Preachers, from the Catholic university, Washington, D. C., who gives courses in education; Dr. Beryl Dickinson, university of Maryland, physics; Miss Anna E. Lynch, St. Teresa's college, Winona, Minn., English; Dr. Lawrence Babb, Northwestern university, English, and the Rev. Father James Cahill, Congregation of the Missionaries, Kendrick seminary, Missouri, and his brother, the Rev. Father Thomas Cahill, also C. M., Denver, Colo., both of whom teach philosophy.

From the University of Leipsic the University of Chicago brings Dr. Walther von Wartburg as special lecturer.

Now what, as Thoreau used to say, "does it all come to"—these various types, these generous expenditures, this total of thirty-six concurrent weeks of intensive training, and these thousands of eager students from all over the country?

Thomas W. Goodspeed, historiographer of the University of Chicago, which, he said, was the first university anywhere to hold a summer session, summed it up in a passage which Mr. Howe found for THE TRIBUNE.

"With the four quarter system, of which it was the heart, the summer quarter [at the U. of C.] was the greatest inspiration of President Harper's educational plan. It not only gave to capable students a chance to take a complete college course in the three years but it also gave the opportunity to universities, colleges, and normal schools, and teachers in high schools, academies, and elementary schools, to continue their studies in a university during one of its regular sessions when all of the activities were in operation and courses of instruction were offered which met the needs of the most advanced students.

Mental Horizons Enlarged.

"The services of the summer quarter to this great class was inestimable. It enlarged mental horizons, it quickened intellectual pulses, it refreshed and enriched minds, it reformed methods of teaching, it kindled ambition for further progress and sent preachers and teachers back to their churches and classrooms with enlarged resources, filled with new ideas about their work, their minds fertile in new plans, and in many ways equipped for increased efficiency."

The beautiful scenes amid which these benefactions are worked out and some of the commanding personalities by whom the work is done will be described next Sunday—my laboratory for that article being Northwestern university. There I met, among many other men of light and leading, Dr. A. T. Bawden, director of educational survey courses in the venerable College of the Pacific, who is enrolled for the summer session of Northwestern's school of education.

"There must be something unique and important here, doctor," said I, "to justify your long journey."

"There is," he replied, "or I would not have come so far. And I am getting all I came for—and more!"

WIRES 'ELECTRIC CHAIR' TO KEEP LANDLORD AWAY

Alfred M. Anderson, 28 years old, a radio repairman, explained yesterday to Judge Leon Edelman in Stockyards court how he rigged up an "electric chair" in his room at 221 West 61st street to shock his landlord, Otto Nordberg, 76 years old. His purpose, he said, was to get even with Nordberg for threatening him with a hammer when he objected to the landlord carrying the family garbage through his room.

"I wound wire around the back and arms of a chair," Anderson explained, "and connected it through a 'B' battery to the light socket. Then I put the chair where Nordberg would have to move it to get through my room."

Instead of Nordberg, his wife Henrihke, 64 years old, grasped the chair. She told the court she was burned severely on both hands. Judge Edelman continued the hearing until July 31 and ordered Anderson examined by Dr. David B. Rotman, court psychiatrist.

Blame Boy, 12, for Wreck of Train; Fireman Killed

Vandergrift, Pa., July 25.—(AP)—Police today attributed the wreck of an 88-car freight train, in which one man lost his life, to a 12 year old boy's prank in placing a piece of iron on a rail. William Coy told police: "I put the iron there and went home. I was going to come back next day and see how much it was flattened out." The locomotive upset and 11 cars plunged into a hillside. Fireman John E. Konkle, 42, father of three children, was scalded to death.

RETURN FUGITIVE PAROLEE.

Judge Justin McCarthy of the Municipal court yesterday fined Ralph Farnsworth, 46 years old, $50 for trying to pass a worthless check, then suspended the fine and ordered Farnsworth returned to Boston where he is wanted for parole violation.

BLOCK SUICIDE OF SNAKE KILLER; UNCOVER RAZOR

Convicted Slayer Says He Is Ready to Hang.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 25.—(AP)—Convinced that Robert James intended to cheat the gallows with a razor blade found in his pocket, officers tonight guarded the greeneyed barber, convicted of drowning his seventh wife after torturing her with a rattlesnake.

"We took it from him," Jailer Clem Peoples said in answer to James' insistence that he voluntarily gave up the blade.

James, whose sentence next Tuesday must be death by hanging, was quoted by bailiffs during the murder trial which ended in his conviction last night as saying: "If I had a good straight razor I would save the state a lot of trouble."

Bed Clothing Searched.

Peoples asserted that guards found the blade in James' blue denim jail jacket after his hints of suicide had prompted a vain search of the bed clothing in his cell.

The state charged during James' trial that he killed his fifth as well as seventh wife for insurance collecting motives and yesterday his confessed associate, Charles Hope, said James had attempted to kill him after the bathtub drowning of Mary James, wife No. 7.

Shunned by other inmates of the jail, James, 38, expressed no qualms about his prospective fate.

"The day I'm hanged will be the happiest day of my life," he said.

James already is under sentence of three to 150 years imprisonment for moral offenses against his 21 year old niece, Lois Wright, who had been a manicurist in his barber shop.

James predicted Hope, after being sentenced, "will tell a different story," saying "He had no reason to be sore at me—I've been a good friend to him nearly 10 years."

James talked of the death of his fifth wife, Winona, found drowned in a tourist camp bathtub a few days after she was injured in an automobile plunge down Pike's Peak.

"They said I beat her on the head with a hammer," he said today. "I didn't do that. The places in her head were full of crushed rocks where she fell out of the car."

Punchboard Owner Refuses to Pay $5; He's Fined $200

Judge Thomas A. Green in the South State Street court, yesterday fined David Levy, a druggist at 4501 Cottage Grove avenue, $200 for possessing a gambling device. Thomas A. York, 7320 Stony Island avenue, testified he won $5 on a punchboard, with the odds about 100 to 1 against him, and then Levy refused to pay.

FOURTH VICTIM DIES OF BLAST IN FUR PLANT

Dominic Colocci, 56 years old, 558 North Artesian avenue, died yesterday in the Chicago Memorial hospital from burns and other injuries incurred last Wednesday in the explosion and fire which destroyed the National Fur Dresing and Dyeing Company, Inc., 1406 North Halsted street. Colocci's widow and five children survive.

His death was the fourth caused by the fur plant tragedy. A woman employé was burned to death and two others died later of their injuries.

Miss Shirley Stuybel, 24 years old, 1508 North Kedzie avenue and George Lazzarotta, 19 years old 5508 North Long avenue, two other employés, are in St. Joseph hospital in a serious condition from burns. Blood transfusions yesterday improved their conditions.

LAUNCH POLICE INQUIRY INTO BREWERY BOMB

Police were investigating the explosion of a small black powder bomb early yesterday on the delivery platform of the Bismarck Brewing company, 2762 Archer avenue. The explosion broke windows in the home of State Representative David E. Shanahan, which is across the street at 2722 Throop street. Mrs. Elizabeth Shanahan, 74 years old, sister of the representative, was alone in the house at the time. Shanahan is in Mercy hospital recovering from a serious illness.

Edward R. Litsinger, a former member of the board of review and chairman of the board of the brewery, could offer no motive for the placement of the bomb. Recently a suit brought by Mrs. Frank J. Parker to compel Litsinger and other officials of the brewery to transfer stock valued at $425,850 to her was settled out of court.

GERSHWIN EARNS WILD ACCLAIM OF RAVINIA THRONG

Season's Peak Audience Jams Pretty Park.

BY EDWARD BARRY.

Ravinia went wild last night over George Gershwin, when that likable gentleman appeared as pianist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra in a program made up entirely of his own works.

The peak audience of the 1936 festival was so enthusiastic over his music and his playing that the quiet of the north side was shattered again and again during the evening by applause that started from the Ravinia pavilion among the trees and spread outward over the wide lawns.

George Gershwin is a plausible advocate of his own music. So is William Daly, the studious looking assistant conductor. Between them they made out a good case for the immense cleverness of a style which is built upon bizarre metrical schemes, arresting melodic sequences, and bold, intelligently employed harmonies.

Consonance of Singular Sort.

Perhaps Gershwin's music lacks repose and poetry. So did the world of which so much of it is a perfect representation—that unchastened predepression world full of sharpness and sureness and hectic movement; a world underlaid by a deep melancholy, but too self-conscious to allow even its sorrow the luxury of complete simplicity.

This music is far from the earth, so far indeed that elemental human things can find tongue in its language only by whirring circumlocutions.

The Chicago Symphony orchestra brought all of its virtuosity to the pat descriptiveness and shrilling brilliance of "An American in Paris," falling easily into its idiom with the versatility of accomplished musicians. Following its cleverly stylized whoopee came the F Major piano concerto, in which Gershwin himself played the solo part.

The Touch of a Master.

The pianist is adept at projecting the ideas which he himself created. He has steely fingers for the brave rhythmic designs which keep the line of the music in such a constant state of flux. His touch becomes ingratiating when some long breathed phrase seems striving for the moment to subdue the restlessness which boils so eternally underneath.

After the intermission came excerpts from "Porgy and Bess," the folk opera which was successfully produced by the Theater Guild. In it the south comes to Harlem—or possibly vice versa—and the result of the meeting is a strange and undeniably fascinating blend of Manhattan's unrest with the folk spirit of the drowsy Carolinas.

Big Hand on "Rhapsody."

A good spot was reserved for the beloved "Rhapsody in Blue" which next to the name and fame of Gershwin himself probably drew more thousands to the park than any other single influence. It stood second last on the program, and the composer returned once more to officiate at the keyboard.

The "Rhapsody" boasts astounding vitality, a vitality that has nothing to do with the historical importance of the work but which derives from the originality and excellence of its thematic material. There are some good melodies woven into its fabric.

An extra dividend was the piano playing of Gershwin in the final group—four famous popular songs. At the conclusion of a swingy performance of "I Got Rhythm" came the biggest demonstration of the evening—a thunder of applause that must have been audible in Evanston, and which produced the result for which it was intended—the addition of an encore that turned out to be "S' Marvelous."

Marion Claire Soloist Today.

Thus the Ravinia festival approaches the end of its gala fourth week.

The program today will be directed by Henry Weber and feature Marion Claire as soloist. The fifth and final week brings Werner Janssen here for three engagements and Hans Lange back for one.

SOCIETY CROWDS RAVINIA

BY JUDITH CASS.

It looked last night at Ravinia park as though the entire crowd that watched the races at Arlington park in the afternoon had motored northeastward to hear the Gershwin concert, the highlight from every standpoint of this year's Ravinia festival.

This was not true, of course, for the crowd that assembled at the race track for the Classic was estimated at 40,000 and only 7,000 were at Ravinia, but when one considers that there are only 1,400 seats in the pavilion at Ravinia, it is easy to see why it looked as though there were thousands and thousands of people in the park.

They sat on the spacious lawn, they sat in the narrow border of grass that surrounds the flower beds, they sat on blankets on the gravel walks, they sat in the tree tops and hundreds sat in dusty chairs that had been stored for years in the old refectory—now the press room.

No Seats, Even at Premium.

Probably for the first time in their lives members of society who are accustomed to having the best of reserved seats at everything dined in state and then went to Ravinia and took their chances along with the rest of the world in finding a place to sit while they listened to the concert.

Evening clothes were as much in evidence outside the pavilion as inside, and velvet wraps did duty alongside automobile blankets as something to protect summer dresses and white flannels from the grass and gravel.

STERLING PLANT RUNNING DESPITE STRIKE FLAREUP

Guards Added After Vegetable Tossing.

Sterling, Ill., July 25.—[Special.]—The Northwestern Barb Wire company plant continued to operate today despite a fresh outburst of strike violence last night in which rotten vegetables were hurled at workers leaving the factory and several employés were beaten.

About half of the regular force of 1,700 persons went to work today under the protection of deputy sherifs and special guards. Both guards and strike pickets were increased at the plant following the disorder.

It had been believed that the strike, called to support demands for higher pay, a closed shop and improved working conditions, was well on the way to settlement. Conferences of company officials, strikers' representatives and federal labor conciliators were recessed for the week-end.

Accuse Union Man in Slaying.

Birmingham, Ala., July 25.—[U. P.]—Homer Welch, accused by Sherif Sam Burns of precipitating a bloody labor outbreak in Talladega, Ala., in which his chief deputy was killed, surrendered to police today.

Welch, a United Textile Workers' organizer, was booked "murder—hold for Talladega county" despite his protestations of innocence. The victim of the slaying was Deputy Sherif John J. Bryant.

Four other union men are in jail in Talladega in connection with the slaying. Burns charged Welch "fired the first shot."

A special grand jury investigation was called for Monday at Talladega by Gov. Bibb Graves.

WPA Strikers Back on Job.

Taylorville, Ill., July 25.—(AP)—A large number of WPA employés in Christian county who left their jobs this week in a demand for higher wages returned to work today as the strike apparently was being brought to an end.

Fail to Break Rand Deadlock.

Cincinnati, O., July 25.—[Special.]—New efforts to reopen the strike-closed typewriter plants of the Remington Rand company were snagged today on the rejection by company officials of an offer to supply additional policemen to assure order at suburban Norwood and abandonment of plans by Gov. Wilbur L. Cross of Connecticut for a conference of governors to help settle the interstate strikes.

Plant President Beaten.

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 25.—(AP)—Sanford A. Bennett, president of the Bennett-Hubbard Candy company which has been the scene of strike disorders for nearly two months, was beaten over the head with a baseball bat late today by an unidentified assailant who escaped in a taxicab. Doctors said that the patient would be out in a week or ten days, barring complications.

Lovely Color (Similar to Nature's Own) For Your Gray Hair

With Pure, Harmless Canute Water

20 years without injury to a single user

Canute Water is a pure, colorless and odorless liquid of wonderful properties. This crystal-clear fluid, when applied to gray, faded or streaked hair, will again make it appear youthful, lustrous and uniform in color.

Not a single person has ever been injured by the use of Canute Water in over 22 years. This exceptional record is your guarantee that it is perfectly safe to use.

Easy to Use

Because of its safety, cleanliness and dependability, you can use Canute Water alone, in the privacy of your own room. No previous experience is necessary. You simply wet the hair with it and allow to dry.

Speedy Action

It requires between one and three applications to re-color the hair to the proper shade. The treatment can be completed in a single day.

And when the hair has once been re-colored, a single treatment, given only once a month, is sufficient to keep it that way. No more attention is necessary.

Results Amazing

Canute Water is neither sticky nor greasy. It leaves the hair clean and natural to the touch. There's not even a suggestion of "dye". Neither is it just a hair "darkener". Canute Water imparts a color similar to nature's very own.

Even your most intimate friends will be unable to distinguish the re-colored hair from the natural. And the new color remains in the hair, permanent against sun, air, salt-water and shampooing.

Action is Positive

No matter what has caused your grayness, Canute Water will positively overcome it. There are no exceptions.

Even if you have used some other hair coloring, it will be a revelation to you to see what Canute Water can do for your hair.

The time of day or the state of the weather makes no difference when using Canute Water. Apply it at your convenience. And since it does not alter the texture of your hair, you may curl, wave or set it—or get a permanent—as usual.

For Men, Too

We made a survey in a number of Cities recently and found that approximately 40% of Canute Water users are men. Since they have less time for the toilette, as a rule, they appreciate the simplicity of its use.

Inexpensive

Even a very modest purse can spare the trifling cost of keeping the hair lovely with Canute Water. A bottle contains enough for six average applications.

So, if you are still young — if you still care what others think — and if you are not quite ready to be classed with the "old folks" or the "has beens", get a bottle now. It will solve your problem so completely that you, yourself, will be astonished.

APPAREL BUYERS GATHER HERE FOR FASHION PREVIEW

250 Fall Creations on Parade Tuesday.

BY MARCIA WINN.

Chicago's growing supremacy as a style center will be demonstrated this week when buyers from all over the nation gather here for the annual fall market of women's ready to wear apparel.

Pennants blazoning forth that "Chicago marches on to fashion leadership" are flying throughout the Chicago wholesale district, but the real proof of the pennanted contention will come Tuesday night when 250 fall creations of the Style Creators of Chicago are modeled at a fashion preview at the Stevens hotel.

In this show, which will be repeated Aug. 4 and Aug. 6, visiting buyers will see no emulation of the fashions of other years or other countries.

"American women want to be exclusively dressed in original designs," Abraham Heller, executive director of the united Chicago designers, explained yesterday. "It isn't enough to be well dressed, because no woman likes to wear the same style her friends wear.

"We think we have taken one great progressive step here in Chicago, for every member of the Chicago association of dress manufacturers not only creates his own styles, but guarantees not to copy or imitate another's design."

Out of their 3,000 or so new fall and winter creations Chicago designs have selected 250 outstanding designs for the fashion preview.

In these lies some explanation of why Chicago is now cutting more than 30 per cent of all the higher priced dresses worn by the women of America, why several thousand new buyers are registered for fall market week here, and why Chicago's business is 50 per cent better than it was last fall.

Formal gowns are the most extravagant seen in any fashion mode since pre-war days, the designers say, with regal and empire modes predominating.

SALZBURG'S MUSIC FESTIVAL IS OPENED; HIGH PRICES PREVAIL

SALZBURG, Austria, July 25.—(AP)—Salzburg's famous annual music festival opened tonight with Arturo Toscanini conducting the opera Fidelio to the acclaim of a cheering audience. The opera house was filled to capacity, with many Americans among the cosmopolitan group that paid dearly for the privilege.

Some tickets reportedly sold for upward of 200 shillings [$38]—four times the box office price. A similar scale was apparent in charges by taxis, hotels, and tradesmen.

Continuing applause greeted the Italian maestro, Toscanini; the Viennese soprano, Lotte Lehman, as Lenora; the Hungarian, Koloman Tatacky, as Florestan, and the Austrian, Lithar Wallerstein, producer.

Police Wreck Elopement of Girl, 15, and Delavan Man

"We love each other," the girl told police. "We thought my folks would object so we came here to get married." The two were seized on complaint of the girl's parents.

Wife Slayer Caught Here and Returned to Atlanta

Harry P. Howe, 49 years old, was arrested yesterday in a flat at 1310 North La Salle street, and returned to Atlanta, Ga., where he is charged with the murder of his wife, Marie, on April 19. Howe admitted killing his wife with a tire tool in a woods near the Atlanta city limits. He waived extradition.

"Money DODGE saved on Gas Paid for my Vacation!"

...the big Dodge 'Beauty Winner' gives me 8 more miles to the gallon than my old car...it has saved me over $85 this year"

says MARJORIE FRANK, ENGLEWOOD, N. J.

SUCH statements as those of Miss Frank and thousands of other enthusiastic owners from coast to coast speak for themselves... These owners are themselves surprised when they discover at first hand what a money-saver Dodge is on gas ... 18 to 24 miles to the gallon they report—up to 20% savings on oil—unbelievably low upkeep cost... and that isn't all...

They contend they are unable to find in any car priced within $500 of Dodge such an extraordinary combination of extra-value, expensive-car features... the luxury of the famous Dodge Airglide-Ride... Chair-Height seats... Patented Floating Power engine mountings... Balanced Driving Control and the protection and security of genuine hydraulic brakes and the safety-steel body!

No wonder more people buy Dodge cars than any other make excepting the three lowest-priced cars!

Drive the big Dodge "Beauty Winner" yourself at the first opportunity and you too will understand the amazing popularity of America's big Money-Saving car. Insist on the free economy test. See right before your own eyes how Dodge saves gasoline. And remember, Dodge now delivers for just a few dollars more than the lowest-priced cars!

DODGE
Division of Chrysler Corporation

"Dodge is using so much less gasoline than the old car I had that I could hardly believe it," says Miss Frank. "I began to keep an accurate record and discovered that the big Dodge gives me 8 more miles to the gallon than my old car. I have put 13,518 miles on my Dodge and it has saved me over $85 this year. That money that Dodge saved me on gas actually paid for my vacation."

CHAIR-HEIGHT SEATS!—See how Dodge seats approximate the shape and height of a comfortable easy chair! In many cars, high floors and low seats raise the knees to an unnatural position—cramp the feet and legs. In Dodge, floors have been lowered, and Dodge Chair-Height seats give you a natural sitting posture!

AIRGLIDE-RIDE is made possible by: (1) longer, more flexible springs with action synchronized front and rear, plus the Levelator which prevents sidesway on turns; (2) moving engine forward to distribute weight evenly to all four wheels; (3) lower floors permit use of Chair-Height Seats; (4) cradling passengers between the axles.

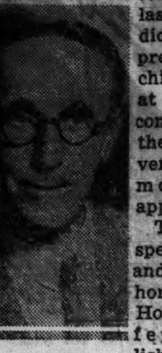
100TH BIRTHDAY OF M'GUFFEY'S TEXTS OBSERVED

1,000 Gather, Laud Author of Famed Readers.

Oxford, O., July 25.—(AP)—An older generation, on whose lives McGuffey's Eclectic Readers left a lasting impress, did honor to the preceptor of their childhood today, at a celebration commemorating the 100th anniversary of the famous textbooks' appearance.



HUGH FULLERTON.

There were speeches, music, and pageants in honor of William Holmes McGuffey, who published the first of a series of six readers in 1836 while he was professor of ancient languages at Miami university here.

Visit McGuffey Museum.

Mainly, however, the 1,000 or more one-time students of McGuffey books and others who gathered on the campus made the occasion one for recalling memories of distant youth for the trading of autographs on frayed flyleaves of the readers and for visiting with solemn respect McGuffey's home and the university's McGuffey museum.

An honorary doctor of letters degree was presented to Hugh S. Fullerton, Columbus, O., newspaper man whom Dr. H. C. Minnich, director of the museum, termed the "greatest living authority" on the famed educator's life.

Called Force for Honesty.

Festivities of a more formal nature started yesterday with a pageant and square dance and continued today with a demonstration of a McGuffey style schoolroom in which children played the parts of their grandparents took in listening to lessons of the red-haired schoolmaster.

John F. Carlisle, founder of the first McGuffey society in 1928, asserted "If McGuffey readers were in use in our schools today there would be more honesty and less crime."

Fred L. Black, representing Henry Ford, ardent collector of McGuffeyana, gave a message from the motor magnate in which he said Ford ranked McGuffey with Lincoln and Edison as the three men he most admired.

SUSPEND COP WHO SHOT GUEST AT GOLDEN WEDDING

Policeman Robert Smith, 30 years old, 4011 North Mead street, of the Irving Park police, was suspended yesterday pending investigation into the shooting of Clarence Stanel, 26 years old, 1751 North Campbell avenue, who was wounded in the hip during the early morning hours while attending a golden wedding party at the Odd Fellows hall, 5837 Irving Park boulevard.

Guests at the party said Smith, who was off duty, intruded on the party, and when asked to leave refused to do so. They said a scuffle occurred outside the hall, in which the policeman fired three shots, one of them striking Stanel. Smith was beaten.

Smith denied the shooting and declared he was attacked when he sought to stop a fight between several young men outside the place. Capt. Herbert Burns of the Irving Park police, who ordered Smith suspended, said there was evidence to support Smith's version of the trouble and asserted he would confer with his superiors tomorrow to determine whether the policeman will be required to face trial board charges or be restored to duty immediately.

APPEALS COURT REVERSES BOND CASE CONVICTION

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday reversed, without remanding for trial, the conviction of Edward B. Gable, 35 years old, 121 South Harvey avenue, Oak Park, a market research specialist, on charges of violating the federal stolen property act.

Gable was found guilty last Nov. 29 in a bench trial before Judge Charles E. Woodward of having in his possession $7,000 in Liberty bonds taken from H. C. Welker, 85 years old, since dead, and his wife, Lydia, 78 years old, of Wyaconda, Mo. Judge Woodward sentenced him to five years in prison. Gable has been at liberty on bond pending his appeal.

In its opinion the appeals court held that there was no evidence to show that Gable was guilty of any conspiracy to obtain the bonds or that he knew the bonds had been stolen. Three other men who pleaded guilty to taking the bonds in exchange for worthless deeds to real estate are in Leavenworth penitentiary.

$9,000 LEFT AS LAST OF 3 CATS TO BENEFIT DIES

Melrose, Mass., July 25.—(AP)—A $9,000 trust fund for the care of three alley cats lay in a bank tonight, the last of its beneficiaries dead.

Moana died last at the home of J. L. Lucas here. Eighteen years old, she had chewed up $2,319 of the funds set aside five years ago by wealthy Miss Charlotte Sutton, Boston Back Bay spinster.

Tabby and Trixie, also pets of the late Miss Sutton, dropped out of the fund earlier. Tabby died and Trixie disappeared.

BATHER SAVED AND REVIVED.

Edward Jenson, 24 years old, 6355 Eberhart avenue, was revived by artificial respiration early yesterday after being rescued by a companion from the lake off Jackson park beach.

NANKING REGIME TAKES POWER IN SOUTHERN CHINA

Rebel Heads Replaced by New War Lords.

BY JOHN POWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SHANGHAI, July 25.—Generals of the central Chinese government at Nanking today had taken over the job of ruling the two rebellious southern provinces of Kwangsi and Kwangtung.

Removal of the provincial war lords formally liquidated the revolt which began nearly two months ago when the rebel armies started north ostensibly to provoke the Nanking government into a war against Japan.

Gen. Pai Chung-hsi and Gen. Li Tsung-jen were removed from their commands in Kwangsi province. Both were associated with Gen. Chen Chi-tang, recently deposed Kwangtung province war lord who led the embryonic rebellion.

Get Other Jobs.

Both Pai and Li, however, were appointed to other posts. Pai was made governor of Chekiang province and Li a member of the standing committee of the newly organized national defense council.

The government mandate removing Pai and Li included provisions for complete reorganization of the political and military administration of Kwangsi province, which henceforth will be under Nanking control. Pai and Li did not indicate their attitudes toward the new appointments.

Gen. Huang Shao-hsiung, until today governor of Chekiang province, was appointed pacification commissioner of Kwangsi province, replacing Li Tsung-jen.

New Cantonese Chief.

Yesterday Gen. Yu Han-mu was sworn into office at Canton to succeed the deposed Chen as pacification commissioner of Kwangtung province. He and his staf roared over Canton in five military airplanes before landing.

One of his first acts was to release several hundred political prisoners who had been arrested during Gen. Chen's roundup of pro-Nanking Blue Shirts. More than forty had been executed before Chen's flight from Canton.

It was disclosed today that the prisoners included two Chinese native born American citizens and five newspaper reporters.

Yu Han-mou's troops occupy strategic points in Canton and are disbanding doubtful regiments so as to assure peace.

The Cantonese commissioners of police, civil affairs and education have already resigned and been replaced by central government nominees. Mayor Liu Chi-Wen of Canton, who is proceeding to Nanking, apparently to plead his case, is expected to be succeeded shortly.

AERIAL CRUISE TRIPS TO SOUTH AMERICA BEGIN NEXT MONTH

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—Plans for the first aerial cruise trips—14 and 21 day all-expense flights to Rio De Janeiro—were disclosed today by Pan-American Airways. Sixteen such flights will be made from Miami, the first to start on Aug. 16 and each Sunday thereafter until the series has been completed.

Sister ships of the Pan-American Clipper, which blazed the air trail across the Pacific, will be used. Sikorsky S-42 flying boats, with four 800 horsepower Hornet engines, each will carry thirty-two passengers, a flight crew of four, a purser, and a steward.

PIW PROJECT NO. 2.

Five hundred millions, a half billion dollars, may be merely pocket change to members of congress, but to the citizen who must earn what he spends it is still a huge sum of money. TRIBUNE readers may, therefore, be interested in learning that railway purchases for the first half of the year 1936 have reached that figure.

A very substantial part of this sum is being utilized for the acquisition of new rolling stock—passenger cars, freight cars, and locomotives. Many man hours of work will be created while these new facilities are being built, but the benefits of the expenditures will not stop there. Railway equipment is valueless without its train and engine crews, maintenance and service workers. A six per cent increase in railway employment occurred in the month of June, despite the summer lull.

Few of the speedy trains that have made their appearance in the last year are replacements. Generally speaking, they constitute additions to the former timetables. As a substantial number of these units are Diesel driven, service stations must be constructed. Higher speeds may not be maintained without grade corrections and other track work, so that the train service employés that ride the new flyers represent but a small part of the increased employment made necessary by the railway revival. Fifty millions have been expended on air-conditioning.

Railway managements are securing this new rolling stock because of a conviction that it will increase revenues. Experimental trains have amply justified the theory. As new funds are received, more equipment will be added because the demand for transportation is inexhaustible. Perhaps a good example is the Milwaukee's "Hiawatha." A year ago the train was handling an average of 552 passengers daily because that was the limit of its capacity. In June, 1936, 812 patrons rode the train daily—an increase of forty per cent. More accommodation has been acquired and added.

Compare this "Private Initiative Works Project No. 2" with the administration's WPA. Five millions was expended on the Florida canal before congress halted a waste that was shocking the nation. The sole dividend is a scar on Florida scenery. At best, WPA expenditures call for nothing better than an attempt to improve the face of nature. When completed they will neither produce additional revenue nor permanent employment. Admittedly, the WPA is providing work for individuals whose names would otherwise appear in the nation's relief roles, but wherein does this furnish an excuse for the avalanche of communistic legislation and restrictive regulation that has been directed toward curbing the efforts of the railways to furnish better and cheaper transportation?

Gallant industry, in the face of government interference and persecution, is proceeding with PIW Project No. 2, the job of reconstructing our twenty-five billion dollar railway network.

A PAINTING AT WEST POINT.

Benedict Arnold has once more become the center of controversy. A great painting has recently been completed, covering an entire wall of the cadets' mess hall at West Point. The artist is T. Loftin Johnson. The theme is the decisive battles of the world as selected by Lord Creasy, with some additions by editors of his book. The American battles depicted are Gettysburg and Saratoga.

Gen. Horatio Gates, who was nominally in command at Saratoga, is presented as the hero of the engagement. In reality, as almost all students are now agreed, principal credit for the victory belongs to Arnold, who personally organized and led the attack and was severely wounded in the fighting.

It was a tough spot for the artist. To adhere to the facts he would have had to glorify an officer who won a victory by his insubordination on the field and subsequently betrayed his country. That would hardly do for West Point. To glorify Gates was almost as bad. Gates' record of military accomplishment is negligible and there is ground for questioning his integrity as well as his capacity.

The matter has been well put in a recent letter to the New York Herald-Tribune from Mr. Robert Nott Merriman of Allentown, Pa. He charges that Gates obtained command of the revolutionary army at Saratoga by intrigue at the expense of Gen. Schuyler. Gates, says Mr. Merriman, was unworthy of command because of "incapacity and an apparent lack of personal courage." Shortly after Saratoga, Gates entered into the Conway cabal directed against Washington, whom he hoped to replace as commander-in-chief. Gates' subsequent service on the board of war was undistinguished and when he returned to active duty in command of the southern army he was defeated at Camden, S. C., by Cornwallis. This is hardly a record to hold before the future officers of the army as something to admire.

Mr. Merriman might have added another charge to his indictment. The terms of surrender which Gen. Gates granted to Burgoyne were, to say the least, extraordinarily generous in view of the perilous situation in which the British commander found himself following his defeat. Burgoyne was called upon to surrender unconditionally, but when he declined to do so Gates promptly agreed to permit the British army to return to England, unmolested, provided that the prisoners promised not to take up arms again against the Americans. There was small excuse for granting such liberal terms and the continental congress refused to ratify them. Accordingly, the British prisoners, except for a handful of officers, were held until the end of the war.

Obviously, the controversy over the West Point mural has only begun. The selection of Gettysburg as another decisive battle of American history is open to almost as much criticism as the glorification of Gates. Gettysburg was an important engagement, but it was not decisive in the sense that the fall of Vicksburg marked a turning point in the struggle. It is odd that the West Point authorities did not undertake to review the judgments of a British historian and his collaborators on American military history before these judgments were committed to canvas.

BUILD ELEVATED ROADS; SAVE LIVES.

TRIBUNE readers will find food for thought in the front page story of today's graphic section. An attempt has been made to condense, in a single article, the highlights of the development of a forbidding swamp into the world's hub of transportation—the city of Chicago.

Nature ordained that the southern tip of Lake Michigan should become the crossroads of the nation, but neglected to drain the site. Fort Dearborn, located at the mouth of the shallow and sluggish creek now called the Chicago river, held the key position, but was almost isolated from the "mainland" by a "sea of mud." Freight and passengers from the east reached the little trading post by vessel from Michigan City, New Buffalo, and ports on the Michigan shore of the lake. Trafic to and from the west and south was transferred to or from "mud carts" at such thriving settlements as Plainfield. These vehicles were equipped with wheels having specially wide treads and tires. The ordinary wagons could not negotiate the heavy mire of Chicago's trails.

Plank roads gave some relief in the decade before the railroads were built, but were soon congested and sunk in the swamps. Even the first railroad, the Galena and Chicago Union, now the North Western, was partially supported by piling. Chicago came to its own when its citizens bodily lifted the level of the entire area to make possible the uninterrupted flow of commerce to and from the city's markets.

History is repeating itself and Chicago has now reached another epochal period. The mud troubles of the pioneer have gone forever, but motorized transportation has produced congestion to create a parallel problem. As in the days before the plank roads, trafic moves freely beyond the suburban areas, but once within the metropolitan district enters a maelstrom of mixed local activities through which it must move at speeds reminiscent of the old order. Street cars, buses, private automobiles, and delivery trucks, each with its local errand, combine to make the city's thoroughfares a nightmare for pedestrians and a labyrinth to the through motorist.

The need for elevated highways to again "bodily lift" the long distance trafic comes logically and inexorably. The present congestion is clogging the wheels of commerce and progress, to say nothing of taking a frightful toll of fifty human casualties daily. The city cannot afford to procrastinate, and if the present administration cannot rise to the necessity it must be replaced by another imbued with the pioneer spirit that conquered the obstacles of nature. Plank No. 3 of THE TRIBUNE's platform for the middle west, "Build elevated roads. Save lives," is repeated at the masthead of every issue of THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE to remind readers that Chicago's preëminence is threatened and that the massacre on our streets is an unnecessary sacrifice.

Editorial of the Day

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY WITH A HA-HA.

[Des Moines Register.]

Edwin R. Embree, president of the Julius Rosenwald fund, writes in the American Scholar that the support given to Negro education in this country is "grudging and unfair." He finds that the average annual expenditure for education of Negroes in the southern states is $12.57 per pupil, while for whites it is $44.31 per pupil, and that the value of Negro school plants and equipment is $37 per pupil as against $157 for whites.

The expenditure for education even of white children in the south is low enough. It is roughly about half of the national average. The average cited here by Mr. Embree for education of Negro children in the south is about one-sixth of the national average at best.

Of course this as a problem that goes much deeper than merely providing the necessary funds. The south is content with a few Negro high schools and just a pretense of adequate Negro institutions of higher learning. The Negro youngster who just forces his way along can "make the grade." The average Negro in the south, living in relative poverty, is no more capable of overcoming the odds against intellectual equality than is the white child under similar circumstances.

And the southern states, on the whole, don't care. They deprive the Negro of the opportuntiy to develop his intellectual stature, and then point to the resultant product as evidence that he is incapable of lifting himself up. The logic of that is obviously lefthanded.

To be sure, Negro education in the south is making some headway. The existence of a few halfway measures for educating Negroes indicates that. The efforts of the Rosenwald fund, just to mention one, suggest that a part of the white population is doing something to help.

But progress is made slowly. The bulk of the white population, especially in the south, is "grudging and unfair" in its support, as Mr. Embree says.

When the Negro has been given as full and fair an opportunity to equip himself for participation in our economic society as the white race gives its own oncoming generations then he will acquit himself with equal credit and dissolve a good many of the social problems which are attributed to him. Until that time he will continue, in many sections, to be a "burden" of the whites' own creating.

A NONPARTISAN VOTER THINKS IT OVER

BY HOWARD W. GARNER.

There are probably many people who have voted, as I have, at times for Republican candidates and at other times for Democratic candidates. In the November election the important question, it seems to me, is not a question of Republican policies or Democratic policies; it is a question of voting for or against the New Deal. That is an issue which cuts across party lines. Some Republicans favor the New Deal and some Democrats are opposed to it.

The speakers at the Philadelphia convention pictured the depression as it was when Mr. Roosevelt became President, charged that the depression was caused by "Republican rule," and claimed that the New Deal has put us on the road to recovery.

First: It is true that conditions were bad, very bad, when Mr. Roosevelt came into office. But conditions were at that time equally bad, or even worse, in other countries. The depression was not a United States depression; it was a worldwide depression.

Second: Was the depression really caused by "Republican rule"? If so, why did it strike some other countries first before striking the United States? And is it a fact that Republican rule is essentially bad? Our most rapid and pronounced development has occurred during the last seventy-five years. During those seventy-five years we have had thirteen Republican Presidents, two Democratic Presidents [Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson], and one New Deal President [Franklin D. Roosevelt]. During those seventy-five years the people of the United States have been more prosperous, have had better working hours, higher wages, better homes, more automobiles, better public educational facilities, and have been more free and independent than the people of any other country. Here, too, there is no class distinction. Most of the men at the top in our business organizations started at the bottom. For years people from other countries have been flocking to the United States as to the promised land, and in such numbers that we have had to make our immigration laws more and more strict. There has been no similar migration of Americans to foreign countries. Giving full credit to the people themselves for our progress, giving full credit to Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson and to those Democrats both in congress and not in congress who coöperated with Republican administrations, surely at least some credit is due to Republican policies and to the thirteen Republican Presidents.

It is not true to say, as did the speakers at the Philadelphia convention, that the world depression was caused by "Republican rule" in the United States. The final verdict of history, I believe, will be that the world depression was caused by two things: first, the destruction of billions of dollars' worth of property, homes, factories, villages, towns, bridges, railroads, and ships in the world war, and the loss of man power, 8,538,315 killed and 21,219,452 wounded; second, by overspeculation by the people of all countries in real estate and later in stocks.

Third: Has the New Deal put us on the road to recovery? Or has it retarded recovery? On page 203 of the May, 1936, issue of the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics of the League of Nations, published at Geneva, Switzerland, is a tabulation covering several small countries as well as most of the important countries of the world. It shows the percentage of industrial production in these countries in relation to the average monthly industrial production in these same countries during the year 1929. The monthly figures used in making the comparison with 1929 were the latest monthly figures available and were for the month of January, February, or March, 1936, except that in the case of Italy, Sweden, and Great Britain [viz., England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales] the latest monthly figures available were those of 1935. The figures used for the United States were the March, 1936, figures. Russia is included in the league of nations tabulation, but it is not included in the list below for the reason that in 1929 Russia was in such a condition that figures for that country do not form a true basis of comparison with the other countries. The tabulation follows:

Japan	135.3	Spain	87.4
Finland	130.0	Italy	87.2
Chile	125.1	Canada	81.7
Denmark	121.0	Belgium	80.6
Estonia	120.3	United States	79.0
Great Britain	112.2	Czechoslovakia	73.6
Norway	111.4	France	71.7
Sweden	109.1	Holland	69.8
Germany	95.8	Poland	67.8
Austria	87.8

The United States, because of its great natural resources, the wide variety of its products, the energy and initiative of its people, its transportation and communication facilities, and its factories, machinery, and manufacturing equipment, should be at the top of the list. Instead, we are fifth from the bottom. Fourteen other countries, smaller than the United States, without our many advantages, and without any New Deal, have achieved a greater degree of recovery than we have. In eight of these countries industrial production is higher today than it was in 1929. Has the New Deal helped us or has it held us back?

In conclusion, it seems to me that both at the Cleveland convention and the Philadelphia convention there was too much rancor, bitterness, mud slinging, and ballyhoo. To vote intelligently we should consider facts and arguments calmly and without prejudice or passion. There should be more light and less heat. The fundamental issue in the November election is, I believe, simply this: Do we wish to continue the American system of government, in which there is a division of powers between the federal government and the several states, and a further division of those powers between the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the government? Or do we wish to abandon that system, establish a "new deal" and become a regimented nation, with the very real possibility that the legislative and judicial branches of the government will be dominated by or abolished by a federal dictator?

The political, social, and economic structure which we have built in the United States is by no means completed. Although it has firm foundations and although improvements have been incorporated from time to time, there are many inequalities which must be corrected. Shall we tear down all that we have built? Shall we discard the plans of the architects and adopt the plans of a new architect who has no definite plans? Shall we build on the quicksands of theory? Shall we flirt with Fascism? Or shall we complete the work that was started by the men who made America a free country?

THE SUMMER COLD.

WELL! I've just heard from an old "woodsy" comrade, who writes from up in Canada somewhere, that the fishing is superb. He concludes his letter with "You should be here" [underscored], and adds a P. S.—"Why don't you write about 'summer colds'? I have one now and it is spoiling my fun. Last night I scarcely slept a wink and I am as stopped up as an Eskimo igloo."

These seemingly unimportant infections are responsible for more days lost, a greater drop in efficiency, and far more complications than any other disease. We now know that they can be communicated from one person to another and we think the cause is a filterable virus—not a "seeable" bacillus.

Most of us have learned to obey our "senses." We do not walk heedlessly over the brink of a precipice; neither do we plunge blindly into a stream of swiftly moving traffic. Nevertheless, we associate freely with those who have colds, oblivious to the fact that they are contagious. We have too little respect for what they may do to us and we look upon them as incidental affairs that come and go, but which in the main mean little.

Of course "colds" are not brought on by cold. They become manifest whenever the resistance of the body drops below a certain point and the nasal mucous membrane and the throat become inflamed.

Excessive heat saps vitality. This means a lowering of body reserve, and when one attempts to cool off by any and all means chilling of the surface of the body may occur and the stage is set for an infection.

I have never known of any one who was stingy about his cold. Most victims are more than willing to pass it on to all and sundry. It is such a happy and pleasant experience that people desire to share their joy!

Why are they spread? Because those who are afflicted will not remain at home. Some of us feel that we are so indispensable to our jobs that we cannot be spared. The chap who mingles with his fellow workers is sowing millions of germs. He is a walking seeder, and his hands, lips, face, hair—even droplets from his mouth when talking—can convey the infection.

Ask yourself how many colds you have had in a year. You are lucky if you have escaped with one or two. The average is probably nearer three. For the person who has suffered more than one attack during twelve months precautions are in order not only to protect the body from sudden changes in temperature but to raise the power of the blood to the point where infection will be destroyed ere it begins to grow.

At the basis of the problem of prevention lies consideration for others. If every one with a cold would go to bed promptly, drink plenty of fluid and fruit juices, use a light diet, and keep quiet, not only would the condition disappear quickly but he would thus be incapable of communicating it to his friends. This demands a higher community intelligence than many now possess. Of course, good mouth and nose hygiene is necessary. With a case in the house, all dishes and utensils used by the patient should be washed with boiling water and soapsuds.

But you say why does not every one take cold? The reason is that we are not all equally susceptible. Let an infected person remain with a dozen well individuals in a room for an hour, and two or three will exhibit symptoms within forty-eight hours. While the others received the virus, conditions for growth were unfavorable. In other words, the nasal mucous membranes, instead of mothering it, turned destroyer.

No! Colds are not merely nuisances; they were serious, inasmuch as influenza, pneumonia, gastrointestinal upsets, middle ear disease, and many other important killers may move in and take possession of the patient. No one has infected sinuses except as the result of a neglected cold, and this may mean years of discomfort with numerous surgical operations all designed to facilitate drainage.

Summer vacations are cold breeders, as many will overdo, secure too little sleep, eat too much, neglect the intestinal tract, and become overheated. We must regard the infection as a public enemy—one that stalks abroad in the land with all too little attention paid to its arsenal of destruction.

SKULL FRACTURE.

I. F. J. writes: A man, 36 years old, had a severe blow on the head, causing a skull fracture. His legs from the hips down were paralyzed and he had violent pains in the lower abdomen. He was delirious for fourteen days. Ice bags were kept on his head and he was on a liquid diet, with little or no medicine. Pneumonia set in and he died on the fourteenth day. Three or four spinal punctures were done. The patient had been a heavy drinker and was not in first class condition at the time of the accident.

1. Is this sort of skull fracture always fatal?
2. What were the spinal punctures for?
3. If the man had lived would he have been an invalid, a cripple, or insane?
4. Does pneumonia always follow skull fracture?

REPLY.

1. It depends on the complications. In simple fractures the mortality rate is only 5 per cent, but in compound fractures with injury to the deeper portion of the brain the mortality is 90 per cent.
2. To relieve pressure inside the brain.
3. It is impossible to say, as cases vary greatly. Probably partially paralyzed, at least.
4. No, although it may follow any type of injury.

DAY BY DAY IN THE MAKING OF THE CONSTITUTION

BY JAMES MADISON

[Father of the Constitution and Fourth President of the United States.]

Philadelphia, Pa., July 26. 1787.—In convention.

A Decision on the National Executive.

Col. Mason of Virginia: In every stage of the question relative to the executive the difficulty of the subject and the diversity of opinions regarding it have appeared. Nor have any of the modes of constituting the department been satisfactory. [Col. Mason after reviewing all the various modes was led to conclude that an election by the national legislature as originally proposed was the best.] Dr. Franklin: It seemed to be imagined by some that the returning to the mass of the people was degrading the magistrate. This he thought was contrary to republican principles. In free governments the rulers are the servants and the people their superiors and sovereigns. [Col. Mason's motion that the report of the committee of the whole that the executive be appointed for seven years and be ineligible a second time was passed in the affirmative. Mr. Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania was now against the whole paragraph.]

On the question on the whole resolution as amended in the words following "that a national executive be instituted to consist of a single person to be chosen by the national legislature for the term of seven years, to be ineligible a second time, with power to carry into execution the national laws, to appoint to offices in cases not otherwise provided for, to be removable on impeachment and conviction of malpractice or neglect of duty, to receive a fixed compensation for the devotion of his time to the public service to be paid out of the national treasury," it passed in the affirmative. New Hampshire ay, Massachusetts not on the floor, Connecticut ay, New Jersey ay, Pennsylvania no, Delaware no, Virginia divided, Mr. Blair and Col. Mason ay, Gen. Washington and Mr. Madison no, Mr. Randolph happened to be out of the house, North Carolina ay, South Carolina ay, Georgia ay.

Mr. Mason moved that "the committee of detail be instructed to receive a clause requiring certain qualifications of landed property and citizenship of the United States in members of the legislature and disqualifying persons having unsettled accounts with or being indebted to the United States from being members of the national legislature. He observed that persons of the latter description had frequently got into the state legislatures in order to promote laws that might shelter their delinquencies and that this evil had crept into congress if report was to be regarded. Mr. Pinckney of South Carolina seconded the motion. Mr. Gouverneur Morris: It was a precept of great antiquity as well as high authority that we should not be righteous overmuch. He thought we ought to be on our guard against being wise overmuch. Mr. Dickinson of Delaware was against any recital of qualifications in the constitution. It was impossible to make a complete one and a partial one would by implication tie up the hands of the legislature. He doubted the policy of interweaving into a republican constitution a veneration of wealth. He had always understood that a veneration for poverty and virtue were the objects of republican encouragement. Mr. Gerry of Massachusetts: If property be one object of government, provisions for securing it cannot be improper.

AUTO HORNS.

Chicago, July 16.—[Friend of the People.]—Crawford avenue is a business street and as such generates a fair amount of noise—noise that the residents can reasonably expect. Unfortunately, across the street from our home are two garages. These garages give service to their customers by having the tenants drive up at night to pick up a garage employé, who in turn drives the car back to the garage. Presumably in the morning the reverse is true, judging from the abnormal racket. The objectionable part of the whole matter is that the people who drive up to the garages sound their horns until some one appears to drive the car home. With the old style of relatively noiseless horns it wasn't too bad, but with the blast horns it is just terrible. Our youngster has difficulty in falling asleep, as do we parents. All through the night these blast horns wake us up. We ask that this racket be stopped. W. J. N.

Officers assigned to investigate report that they interviewed the owners of the two garages complained of, who stated that they had discharged several employés who had disregarded orders to remain outside to take care of the boarders. Since then other men have been employed and warned to remain on the outside of the garages and also instructed all boarders to refrain from blowing their horns upon arriving at the garages.
JAMES P. ALLMAN,
Commissioner of Police.

ILLEGAL PARKING.

Chicago, July 16.—[Friend of the People.]—From time to time we have complained about the wrecking company parking five to eight trucks on the street in our block, both day and night. They block the street entirely, so that we are unable to have deliveries made to our homes without undue inconvenience and are prevented from parking our own cars in the street. They have done all sorts of damage since this practice has continued and are not at all mindful of the property rights of others. A. R.

Officers assigned report they found trailers parked in the street all night, blocking same. The owner has promised to remove them, but upon a subsequent visit the trailers were still parked and owner was issued summons for violation of section 54—obstructing trafic. We will continue to give this complaint attention in the future and if any violations are found, proper action will be taken.

Commissioner of Police.

LOAN OR GIFT?

Chicago, July 18.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—I am the oldest sister of a large family and one of my younger brothers was anxious to go to college. 1. I helped him by working very hard as a nurse and it cost me $1,600. As soon as he finished he married without even saying thank you for my assistance. 2. How can I go about getting this money back? I am in need. He has paid no interest and refuses to answer my request. He has a job. M. K.

1. You do not state whether it was understood at the time that your assistance was as a gift or as a loan.
2. If you can satisfy a court that the understanding was that you were to be repaid, then it would be worth your while to place your claim in the hands of an attorney.

A CONTRAST.

Chicago, July 21.—Former service men, both world war and Spanish-American war, should take a few lessons in patriotism from the presidential field.

Landon, with an orphaned baby girl and with very little money, enlisted in 1918. Hamilton, his campaign manager, served in a machine gun outfit. Frank Knox, with a glorious Spanish-American war record behind him, and 43 years old, married, and just getting going in business, enlisted as a private in 1917, was sent to an officers' training camp, where the physical training was designed to test to the uttermost men of 24. He came through the rigors of work which killed off many men half his age, and served in France with distinction. Edward Hayes, Knox campaign manager, served in the navy throughout the war. All are active in the ranks of veterans' organizations.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was in his 17th year, big and husky, when war was declared against Spain. Records show that hundreds of boys of 17 volunteered for this war. But not F. D. Roosevelt. In 1917 Roosevelt was 35, worth millions, in perfect health, and the finest kind of officer material. He stuck to his soft $10,000 a year job as assistant secretary of the navy, given him because he had sailed a catboat on Long Island sound, and allowed 43 year old Frank Knox to go out and do the dirty work. Knox, during his first four months in service, carrying a gun in the fifteen hours a day training camp work, drew $4.70 per month after his allotment, insurance, and Liberty loan subscriptions were deducted from his "salary" of $30 per month.

Jim Farley was 29, under draft age, big and husky. But he claimed exemption and stayed out to build a political machine in his home town. Jack Garner was 30 when war with Spain was declared, but he, too, failed to volunteer.

It is easy to understand why Roosevelt, Garner, Farley and all their kind are against veterans' hospitalization, compensation or fair treatment.

Any veteran who votes for Roosevelt and his anti-veteran administration is not worthy of the cause in which he served. A VETERAN OF BOTH WARS.

PLANNED DISCORD.

Cleveland, O., July 15.—There will always be a United States of America, I hope. But there will certainly never be a united American people as long as we have in the White House a man who himself and his postmaster general preach the doctrin of class hatred.

Give us Landon and Knox to return us to tolerance and brotherly love.
STEVE WARREN.

ESCALATORS WANTED.

Chicago, July 15.—If the "L" operators do not care to start the installation of escalators and other forms of modernized stairway equipment, would they be so kind as to place at strategic points throughout their right of way herds of pack mules? CHARLES WEST,
President, Rogers Park Civic League.

THERE'D BE MORE TO TAKE CREDIT FOR.

Lafayette, Ind., July 13.—Suppose Mr. Hoover had been a Democratic President and Mr. Roosevelt a Republican President, would the G. O. P. now be taking credit for the improvement in business conditions? O. M. BOOHER.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS.

Chicago, July 16.—I have often reflected upon the large quantity of water that goes to waste from the hundreds of drinking fountains throughout the city, particularly those that run continuously day and night through the summer season, and wondered if some way could not be devised whereby this waste could be utilized for some good purpose. All of this water is furnished at the expense of the taxpayers.

This waste is especially noticeable in the various parks and playgrounds and it would seem that the waste water could be diverted and used for sprinkling the lawns. F. W. P. JR.

YES.

Chicago, July 21.—In an Associated Press story appearing in this morning's TRIBUNE it was reported that King Edward VIII. was considering a visit to the United States, following his coronation next May. The story further said that the king, traveling in America next May, might call on President Roosevelt in the White House.

Isn't the (AP) taking a little bit too much for granted?
STANTON M. MEYER.

HAIRLESS HAIR CUTS.

Chicago, July 21.—Why not give the bald headed man a break? The barber charges us 60 cents no matter if a man is entirely bald, with only a fringe of hair which can be cut with a clipper in less than three minutes, but charges a boy with a heavy mop of hair 35 cents that requires fifteen to twenty minutes to earn. I am informed the hair clipper business is booming and mother does the job. E. A. S.

BOTH.

Chicago, July 14.—During the hot weather I have been a constant bather. Shortly after the lunch hour, however, the water becomes filthy, due to the many people who, after eating their lunch, deposit the rubbish in the lake. It is surprising that adults are so careless. Have they no civic pride, or is it just lack of common sense?
R. WARE.

POLICE IN HYDE PARK.

Chicago, July 15.—Wondering why I saw no police in Hyde Park from 4 p. m. to 12 p. m. I inquired and found they were instructed to patrol their posts only from 59th street to 39th street and from Cottage Grove to Ellis, leaving east of Ellis to the lake and from 59th street to 39th street open for all crooks and automobile thieves to enter. Is that justice?
W. TAYLOR.

METHODIST OPINION.

SHE MUST HAVE BOUGHT ANOTHER.

Chicago, July 16.—Doesn't Gus Edson know that Henrietta Zander threw her old transformation out of the window long before she married Tom Carr? She replaced it with an up to date wig and looked quite stunning. Give her a chance. I rather like the old girl. DON COLE.

BILLS DRAFTED TO EASE RELIEF FUND SHORTAGE

Ward to Ask Six Million from Sales Tax.

With the relief special session of the Illinois general assembly scheduled to reconvene on Aug. 4, bills are being drawn that would increase the diversion of state sales tax money to Chicago and to the townships throughout the state to meet deficits in relief budgets.

State Senator Harold G. Ward [Dem., Chicago] said yesterday he would ask the legislature for an appropriation of at least $6,000,000 from the sales tax. This amount, he said, would be made available at the rate of $1,000,000 a month, which would make it last through next January when the assembly again will be in regular session.

Care for Overhead Costs.

Provision will be made in his bill, Ward said, for administrative costs to be paid out of either this additional appropriation or out of any of the sales tax funds that are distributed for relief. Senator Ward said that a precedent for this plan exists in previous appropriations of money to the Illinois Emergency Relief commission out of which it paid its expenses.

There has been considerable speculation relative to the attitude of Gov. Henry Horner toward a further appropriation from the sales tax revenue, which amounts to 6 million dollars a month, especially since he vetoed a bill giving relief one-half, instead of one-third, of the 3 per cent tax. That bill would have made available for relief an additional one million a month, increasing the total to three millions, the same sum that Ward is proposing again.

Governor Gets Facts on Rates.

It was said that while the governor has not made known whether he will propose any legislation, or what direction it will take if he does, he has been assembling data to get a picture of the relief conditions in the entire state. Some observers, however, believe that the recent action of the IERC, which the governor controls, in lending $200,000 to Chicago and the townships to meet administrative costs is indicative of a change in his policy.

Checks for $71,565 were mailed to the thirty townships in Cook county outside the Chicago city limits yesterday by County Treasurer Joseph L. Gill. The money is the townships' share of $862,488 sales tax allotment, which the treasurer received Friday from the state auditor. The city's portion, $790,923, was turned over to City Treasurer Gustave Brand on Friday.

Seek Legal Basis.

At the same time Leo M. Lyons, city relief commissioner and executive secretary of the IERC, submitted to the city's legal department the loan proposal of the IERC to meet administrative costs to determine how the transfer can be made legally. Lyons will be in Springfield when the legislature convenes to furnish any data needed.

United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis, who is in Chicago, said that he is awaiting conferences with Gov. Horner and Mayor Kelly before trying anew at Washington to get funds. His plan, he said, is to have the federal government advance money, which would be repaid.

"I want the consent and approval of the mayor and the governor before I return to Washington and start afresh," said Senator Lewis. "I want to know to what extent in their names I can go."

65 PCT. INCREASE IN DEATH RATE BLAMED ON HEAT

Washington, D. C., July 25.—(AP)—A 65 per cent increase in the number of deaths in principal cities during the week ended July 18, compared with the same week a year ago, was attributed by the census bureau today to intense heat that prevailed in many sections.

Deaths in 86 large cities during the week ended July 18 totaled 12,183, the bureau reported, compared with 7,439 for the corresponding 1935 week. The week in 1935 "was normal with respect to temperature," the bureau said.

The bureau said the western Great Lakes region, involving Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, "were dealt a heavy loss in the present emergency" with an increase of 238 per cent in mortality compared with the corresponding week in 1935.

Among cities showing the largest increases were Indianapolis, St. Louis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Detroit, Louisville, Fort Worth, Chicago, Cleveland, Duluth, Grand Rapids, and Flint, Mich.

FORECAST LIGHT SHOWERS IN AREA HURT BY DROUTH

Cooler Weather Seen as Added Relief.

Pierre, S. D., July 25.—[Special.]—Showers were expected to offer some relief in parts of the drouth stricken area tomorrow, although there was no hope forecast for Nebraska and Kansas. The rain was expected to be too light in many sections to do much good.

The United States census bureau today recognized the seriousness of hot weather as a death threat. Deaths in principal cities over the country during the week ending July 18 increased 65 per cent over the same period in 1935. The bureau said the heat was to blame.

Cooler weather was expected over the week-end in the sun baked Dakotas and northwestern Minnesota, but the showers forecast for that area were expected to be insufficient to give much aid to long suffering crops.

More Rain for Lakes Region.

More beneficial rains were forecast for the states adjoining Lake Michigan, eastern Iowa, eastern Missouri, and parts of Kentucky.

Weather officials could see no prospects of any letup of the hot, dry weather that has blasted the temperatures to more than 100 degrees in the plains region of Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and most of Missouri. Some relief was expected tomorrow only in western Nebraska.

The drouth was given a jolt around Terre Haute, Ind., last night when three inches of rain fell. About an inch of rain fell in Illinois and parts of Iowa.

U. S. Pushes Relief Plans.

The federal government took more steps to ease the situation caused by the continued hot weather. A conference on a long range drouth relief program was called for Sept. 23 and 24 by Morris L. Cooke, chairman of President Roosevelt's drouth committee.

The agriculture department's drouth committee added fifty-five counties in Kansas, Georgia, Missouri, and South Dakota to the emergency list. WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins prepared to confer with the President on Campbell Island, N. B., Tuesday.

BRISBANE FILES $70,021 APPEAL ON INCOME TAX

Washington, D. C., July 25.—[Special.]—Arthur Brisbane, columnist and general editorial director of the Hearst newspapers, today asked the United States board of tax appeals for a redetermination of an asserted income tax deficiency of $70,021 on returns filed in 1931 and 1932.

In his appeal Brisbane countered the claims of the commissioner of internal revenue with the assertion that he had overpaid the government $2,500. The columnist said he had received a net salary of $256,500 in 1930 and had sustained losses of $188,299 in real estate and $25,317 from operation of the Allaire stables.

In another case before the appeals board Albert J. Kobler, Hearst advertising executive, agreed to pay $106,021 on 1928 income. This was the full amount of the government's claim. Kobler's income came from the Star company, a Hearst holding concern, and the American Weekly, Inc.

that during the next year the wheat market will be a seller's instead of a buyer's market. In fact he believes it will be the best seller's market in the last seven years.

Notes Trend to Underproduction.

He points out that the world wheat consumption has exceeded world production every year excepting one since 1929-'30. In 1932-'33 there was slightly more wheat produced than consumed. World consumption normally increases at the rate of about 40 million bushels a year. Burdensome surpluses of wheat have been wiped out. There will not be any price pressure resulting from surplus supplies on the world market during the next year.

In reviewing the world wheat situation yesterday Mr. Murray said: "Drouth in various parts of the world is the main cause of the wheat shortage. This crop shortage situation together with the improving world financial trend, would seem to forecast higher wheat prices than have prevailed since 1929-'30."

OLD FASHIONED CIRCUS OPENER THRILLS THRONG

Show Arrives for 9 Days at Soldiers' Field.

The "big top" came to Chicago yesterday and tens of thousands of Chicagoans went to Soldiers' field for the opening of Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey's nine day stand.

For those adults or children who had a nostalgia for the accoutrements of the "old fashioned" circus, there was complete satisfaction. There was pink lemonade. The clowns were solemn, ludicrous, gargantuan, or lilliputian. There was pageantry, suspense, a thrill for every minute, and a gasp for every mouth.

Many New Novelties.

But for those who like progress and novelty along with the gilt and breath-taking feats of old, there again was satisfaction. There was, for instance, the herd of five African pigmy elephants. "Not babies," you are told by that master of adjectives, the ringmaster, who now announces through a modern public address system, "but middle aged midget tuskers."

And, dancing, prancing and pirouetting on a tightrope strung high in the air are the four Naitto sisters, the Eurasian "wire wizards," in America for the first time.

Novel Aerial Feat.

High in the air, too, were the flying gymnasts, the Concellos, "absolutely fearless performers who fly like winged birds through space." But perhaps the most "novel" aerial feat was that of the Antaleks, when a steel ball spun around on the feet of the three Antalek brothers, opened—and out came Jafsie to do new feats of her own.

Perhaps the longest period of suspense was when the Wallendas, "high wire daredevils whose dangerous exploits have made two continents gasp," rode across a wire, high over the heads of the audience, three tiers high on a bicycle.

The show will be repeated at 2 and 8 p. m. daily through Aug. 2.

BRITAIN TO CALL OFF NAVAL PACT TO SATISFY ITALY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, July 25.—The British government is preparing a new concession to obtain Italy's attendance at the Locarno conference scheduled for this fall, and at the same time to improve Anglo-Italian relations.

The abrogation of this agreement will meet the second of Italy's two conditions for participation in the forthcoming talks. The other was that Germany should be invited. This has been done.

SCIENTISTS DETECT RHYTHMIC PULSES IN BLOOD CORPUSCLES

Cambridge, Mass., July 25.—(AP)—A strange sort of pulse discovered in red blood corpuscles was reported to the conference on spectroscopy and color which closed a week's meeting at Massachusetts Institute of Technology today.

This pulse was found in hemoglobin, the red coloring substance of blood. It appeared in molecules of the red material.

The beat was rhythmical. It apparently was composed of the combined effect of exceedingly rapid pulsations in the thousands of atomic particles which compose a single molecule of hemoglobin. These individual pulsations were oscillations somewhere near the speed of the vibrations of light.

The discoveries were made by Dr. David L. Drabkin of the University of Pennsylvania school of medicine and O. R. Wulf of the U. S. bureau of chemistry and soils.

U. S. AID TELLS OF BRIBE OFFER AT TRIAL OF 17

Peoria, Ill., July 25.—[Special.]—An unsuccessful attempt by one of the defendants to "buy protection" from a federal investigator was charged before a United States District court jury today in the liquor conspiracy trial of 17 men.

Over defense objections Investigator Orville Brock of Des Moines, Iowa, was permitted by Judge J. Earl Major to tell of the alleged proposition made by John P. Swayne in Burlington, Iowa, four years ago.

"Another investigator and I met Swayne and Fred Webster in a car and they drove us to a by-road on the outskirts of town," Brock testified. "Swayne asked me if I would take $125 a month to work with them; to tip them off on raids and protect their plants. He said they were getting most of their stuff from Wisconsin and some from the Wainer brothers."

Brock also testified that he had seen Swayne and the other Burlington defendants, Orol Fleming and George Lewis, coming and going from a Burlington "blind pig" where, the government contends, numerous telephone calls were made to headquarters of the ring in Galesburg.

ITALIAN RULE OF ETHIOPIA IS GIVEN NAZI RECOGNITION

Legation at Addis Ababa Becomes Consulate.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, July 25.—Germany today became the first nation to recognize Italian sovereignty over Ethiopia. The recognition came about through abolition of the German legation in Addis Ababa and its replacement with a general consulate.

Ulrich von Hassell, German ambassador to Italy, communicated Berlin's decision to Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister, at Rome. Messages from that capital indicated Italy's satisfaction. The Nazi action is viewed as one of the initial results of the recent Austro-German accord which Italy approved.

Austria Hints at Recognition.

Austria indirectly recognized the conquest of Ethiopia recently when she accredited her new [illegible] to "Emperor" Victor Emmanuel of Italy, instead of to King Victor Emmanuel, as previously. The king was made emperor of Ethiopia following the conquest of the country. The Nazi controled Free City of Danzig also had previously recognized Ethiopia's new status.

The closeness of Italo-German relations was further seen in the fact that Germany will reply to the invitation of three of the Locarno powers [Great Britain, France and Belgium] to a plenary conference "only after the closest discussion with Italy."

"Germany will accept only if Italy is completely satisfied," it was said.

Italy, however, is expected to accept only after England, France and Belgium consent to recognize her sovereignty over Ethiopia.

Sons of Duce to Visit Berlin.

Another step toward cementing the growing Italo-German friendship will be the expected visit to Berlin of Vittorio and Benito Mussolini, sons of the premier. Their war laurels still fresh on their brows, the young men will come here, according to the official explanation, to take part in an international air rally at the newly opened air port for both land and sea planes at Rangsdorf, outside Berlin.

Official Italian circles here asserted they are still uniformed as to the exact day the youths will arrive.

As a reward for his work on the Austro-German pact, Franz von Papen, Nazi minister to Vienna, was named an ambassador extraordinary on special mission today. The German legation in Austria has not been made an embassy, but von Papen's new title qualifies him to become ambassador to Rome or London, it is believed. Von Papen is now in Budapest to perfect details for coöperation between Germany, Austria and Hungary.

ARMY WILL TEST ITS MECHANIZED FORCE ON FIELD

Columbus, O., July 25.—(AP)—Experiments of the war department with a mechanized combat force will receive an actual test Aug. 1 to 15 in the second army maneuvers at Fort Knox, Ky.

Modern mechanization originated in the world war, but the United States and other countries developed it as a major factor in formulating war plan maneuvers. The rôle of creating mobility, shock, and fire action to assist in paving the way for the infantry, once the work of the cavalry, has now been taken over by tanks and armored cars.

When 40,000 officers and enlisted men take the field at Fort Knox for the maneuvers the stage will be set for some new lessons in combat strategy. High speed tank cars and trucks with machine guns attached to their cabs will roll across the 30,000 acres of the encampment. Overhead trim pursuit ships will dart toward "enemy" lines, followed by roaring bombing planes with a cargo of destruction for mock munitions and industrial centers.

Suicide Leap Fails

LINEENE MADDEN.

Glad that a coast guard patrol boat saved her early yesterday after she had jumped into the Chicago river from the Wabash avenue bridge, Miss Lineene Madden, 23 years old, of Grand Rapids, Mich., told Judge George B. Weiss of the Woman's court that she wanted to live.

Miss Madden described herself as a college graduate and an orphan, whose father, a wealthy market speculator, and mother were killed in an automobile accident six years ago in Oregon.

"My father left me a $250,000 estate," Miss Madden told the court. "For three years I received $150 a month, then unwise investments by my guardian left me with nothing. Two days ago I came here to look for work. I was sick, and when I lost my purse with my last $30. I decided on the river."

Because she had a high temperature, Judge Weiss continued her charge of disorderly conduct until Monday and placed her in the care of a physician.

REGENTS SLASH U. OF W. BUDGET, REBUFF FRANK

Madison, Wis., July 25.—[Special.]—Following three days of wrangling, the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin today adopted a limited half year budget designed to support the university until additional needs are presented to the legislature early next year.

The vote was eight to five. The eight members of the progressive bloc, five of whom were appointed by Gov. Phil F. LaFollette, last February, voted for the new budget, just as they had voted against an increase in student fees advocated by President Glenn Frank, to meet anticipated deficits. They also voted to slash President Frank's salary from $20,400 to $15,000. The budget as approved was backed by the governor.

President Frank's budget, which proposed to meet anticipated deficits of $215,000 by increasing student fees to $50 a semester, was voted down Thursday. The budget takes no account of Dr. Frank's plea that the additional $215,000 was needed to continue the university at a high standard.

ARMY INCREASES MAN POWER BY 28,000 IN YEAR

Washington, D. C., July 25.—(AP)—The United States army was shown today to have increased its actual fighting man power by more than 28,000 men during the past year.

When the war department began a year ago its recruiting drive to fulfill the congressional authorization of a total force of 165,000 men, the army had only 118,750 enlisted men and less than 12,000 officers.

The war department today made public July recruiting figures showing that the army now has 146,782 enlisted men and is taking in rookies at the rate of 1,500 a month. The high command has set attainment of the goal for July 1, 1937.

PROTEST FLYING OF NAZI FLAG; PLANS CHANGED

Milwaukee Picnic Committee Has Complaints.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Milwaukee, Wis., July 25.—[Special.]—To harmonize all factions among the German American population of Wisconsin, three flags that figure in German history will be flown tomorrow at Washington park when the annual German Day celebration is held. That was announced by members of the executive committee tonight.

The celebration last year attracted 50,000 to the park from all parts of the state. A larger crowd is expected tomorrow.

The original plan had been to display the Nazi Swastika only as the emblem of Germany to be flown alongside the official flags of Hungary, Switzerland, and the United States. Consuls of these nations have been invited to be present as guests.

Anti-Nazi Protest.

There was a storm of protest from anti-Nazis in Milwaukee and other cities at this announcement. The protests were voiced in letters to Mayor Daniel Hoan of Milwaukee and Gov. Phil La Follette, scheduled as the principal speakers. Various societies opposed display of the Nazi banner.

Among their membership are veterans who had served in the German army during the Imperial regime. Organizations that passed resolutions condemning display of the Nazi flag included the Milwaukee branch of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund of America, one of the largest German-American organizations in the state.

Dr. F. F. Dollert of the German Day committee explained that the display of the flag did not indicate Nazi sympathies, but would be a diplomatic courtesy.

Called Gesture of Courtesy.

"We have invited representatives of the German, Swiss, and Austrian consulates to be our guests, and courtesy demands we display their flags," Dollert said.

Paul Voigt, president of the Wisconsin Federation of German American societies, announced tonight that the compromise display had been agreed upon at a meeting of the committee today.

Karl Bennewitz, chairman of the celebration, explained the compromise.

"We had no intention of offending any one," he said. "We are not Nazis, we are not communists, but are American citizens with a natural love of the land where we were born, its history and its customs. We believed diplomatic courtesy demanded display of the swastika.

"So that there be no misunderstanding, we today decided to display three flags that have figured in German history—the Nazi banner of present day Germany, the time honored white and gold flag that was Germany's emblem for 10 years, and the red, white and black of the imperial regime. We respect and honor the feeling of those who served under the flags preceding the Nazi regime; we want to preserve their good feeling. The display agreed on will be historic, as well as a diplomatic courtesy."

KALTENBORN RADIO INTERVIEW CANCELED BY NAZI OFFICIALS

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—H. V. Kaltenborn, news commentator, tonight said a scheduled interview he was to have broadcast with Arthur Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, had been canceled by the German Nazi party. He spoke to a nationwide American audience from London.

"The Nazi government of Berlin refused to permit the president of the Free State of Danzig to speak to free America," Mr. Kaltenborn said, "which indicates that even in so relatively unimportant matters as an interview with the head of a state there are international complications.

"And it's certainly true tonight that the fate of the Spanish revolution may be decided by outside interference because Italy and Germany sympathize with the conservative, royalist rebels, whereas France and Russia are seeking to help the radical government of Spain whose power tonight still is in the balance."

GERMANY TO PAY 20 MILLIONS IN U.S. BLAST CASES

Settlement in Black Tom and Kingsland Claims.

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—Germany has agreed to payments totaling about $20,000,000 in settlement of world war sabotage claims growing out of the Black Tom and Kingsland, N. J., munitions explosions, it was reported here today.

The payments will go to a group of American and Canadian corporations, notably the Lehigh Valley railroad, the Canadian Car and Foundry company, the Bethlehem Steel company, the E. I. du Pont de Nemours company, and insurance underwriters.

The formal awards will be made, it is said, by the German-American mixed claims commission, and they will be in maximum amounts if the estimated $20,000,000 total is reached, this being about all the money that is left at the commission's disposal.

Other Funds Allotted.

Other funds, internationally contributed to the settlement of war claims pool and once running well into nine figures, all have been allotted with the exception of the $20,000,000, this sum being specifically reserved pending outcome of the sabotage cases.

Robert W. Bonynge, counsel for the state department before the commission with the title of "American agent," negotiated the settlement of the sabotage claims in Germany this month. He has just returned, and will go to Washington tomorrow to present personally his report to the secretary of state.

The settlement follows a bitter attack before the mixed claims commission a few weeks ago on the manner in which Germany has fought the sabotage claims in years gone by.

False Evidence Alleged.

Bonynge, aided by William D. Mitchell, former United States attorney general, as special counsel, accused the German government of having presented false, fraudulent and collusive testimony to the commission in an effort to refute the evidence of the claimants that the blasts were the work of saboteurs.

German shipping interests, including the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American lines, now combined under Nazi government control, figured prominently in the fight before the commission for several years. Had the sabotage claims been defeated, about half the $20,000,000 reserve would have gone to these lines, in payment of their own war claims.

FOUND DEAD IN HOME.

Mrs. Irene Sans, 46 years old, was found dead, apparently from a heart attack, last night in her home at 4619 Hazel street. A pulmotor squad worked unsuccessfully over her for fifteen minutes.

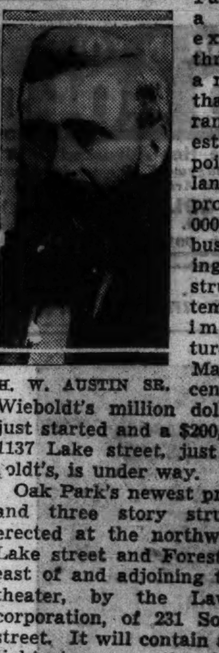
Announce $750,000 Apartment Hotel and Business Building Project for Oak Park

WILL BE BUILT AT LAKE STREET, FOREST CORNER

Entire Structure to Be Air Conditioned.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

With the announcement last night of a new building project for Oak Park to involve a reported total expenditure of three-quarters of a million dollars, that suburb now ranks as the busiest construction point in Chicagoland — with approximately $2,000,000 worth of business buildings under construction or contemplated for the immediate future in the Lake-Marion business center. Work on Wieboldt's million dollar store has just started and a $200,000 project at 1137 Lake street, just east of Wieboldt's, is under way.



H. W. AUSTIN SR.

Oak Park's newest project is a one and three story structure to be erected at the northwest corner of Lake street and Forest avenue, just east of and adjoining the new Lake theater, by the Lawrence-Barton corporation, of 231 South La Salle street. It will contain approximately eight stores on the first floor, an apartment hotel on the second and third floors and possibly a garage to occupy the basement. The entire building is to be air-conditioned.

Loews, Inc., Paid $200,000.

The temperature controlled hotel will have forty-eight suites, of one, two, and three rooms, all kitchenettes, with the entrance on Forest avenue. A roof garden for use of the hotel tenants is contemplated on the roof of the one story section, which will be between the theater and the three story unit on the corner.

A novel feature will be a permanent, concrete canopy extending along Lake street and for a short distance on Forest, in front of all shops. Glass bricks will be used in place of windows on much of the first floor elevation on Forest avenue.

Loews, Inc., last September bought from Henry W. Austin, the 415 feet of frontage on Lake street extending west from Forest avenue, paying $200,000, according to the county records. On 110 feet of this frontage the Lake theater and store building was erected and was opened for business last spring.

Still Lives in Birthplace.

Loews, Inc., have now sold the 246 feet east of the theater extending to Forest avenue to the Lawrence-Barton corporation, which has had plans drawn by Holabird & Root for the hotel and store building. It was said the total investment in land and building will be $750,000.

The remaining sixty feet of the 415 feet of frontage bought by Loews, Inc., just west of the Lake theater, still is unimproved and is practically the only vacant between Forest and Harlem avenues.

Henry W. Austin, who is chairman of the board of the Oak Park Trust and Savings bank, still occupies the home in which he was born, the house having been moved when the theater was built to a site on Forest avenue just north of the contemplated hotel. Austin still owns a large piece of property north of the land sold to Loews, fronting 420 feet on Forest avenue and 416 feet on Ontario street.

Makes Oak Park Dry.

Austin's father, Henry W. Austin, senior, was the founder of the village of Austin, which later became part of Chicago. He also was a pioneer resident of Oak Park, establishing his home in what later became known as Austin Woods, at Lake and Forest, seventy-six years ago.

Oak Park has had no saloons since 1873, when Austin wiped them out by buying them and auctioning off the fixtures. He made an agreement with the township of Cicero [of which Oak Park was a part] that he would buy the Oak Park saloons—five in all—if Cicero agreed never to issue any more licenses. For sixty-three years Oak Park has been dry.

PLAN ELABORATE RESTAURANT ON SKOKIE HIGHWAY

Louis and Elmer Falkenstein, owners of the Hi-Hat restaurant on Rush street, are having plans drawn by Architect Richard Powers for a modern summer café on the west side of Skokie highway, just south of Winnetka road, in the town of Northfield. The group of buildings and terraces will extend for approximately 600 feet along the highway. A large dining room, built to give the effect of an open air terrace, but completely air-conditioned, will accommodate 450 dinner guests. The color scheme will be in brilliant aquatic blues and greens. Completion is planned for next spring.

Lydy to Have $150,000 Unit in La Salle St.

Two of the oldest landmarks in the financial district will make way for what is asserted will be one of the largest and most modern structures in the country devoted to the parking industry — a $150,000 air conditioned office building for the R. G. Lydy Parking company. The buildings to be wrecked are the eight story Traders building at 305-15 South La Salle street and the four story Imperial building at 304-12 South Clark street, both just two years past the half century mark in age.

RICHARD G. LYDY.

On the south part of this site, which fronts 100 feet on both La Salle and Clark, with a depth of 213 feet, Richard G. Lydy, president of the firm bearing his name, will erect a two story building from plans by Loebl & Schlossman. Wreckers will start razing the present buildings on Sept. 1, and work will start on the new office building about Oct. 1.

Space for 600 Cars.

The north section of the site, 80 by 213 feet, will be used for open air parking, and in addition a lower level parking unit, 100 by 213 feet, under both the street level parking space and the building, will provide space for 600 cars.

The office building, 213 feet long, extending from La Salle to Clark, will be only twenty feet wide on the first floor. It will have shops at both ends on Clark and La Salle. The balance of the first floor will be used for parking and ramps to the lower level, as well as elaborate lounges and rest rooms for patrons.

The entire second floor, which will be seven feet wider than the first floor, will be devoted to the general offices of the Lydy company. The personal offices of R. G. Lydy will occupy the center tower section, which will be two stories high.

Paid $203 in 1833.

A feature of this 20 foot high suite of offices will be a large stained glass window from the old J. V. Farwell residence. It will be placed at one end of a small auditorium used for personnel work.

The block of land which includes this site was purchased for $203 from the state of Illinois in 1833 by Walter L. Newberry, whose name the Newberry library bears. The present buildings were erected in 1884.

Claude A. Welles, formerly manager of the Merchandise Mart and now vice president of the Lydy concern, represented his firm in the negotiation of a twenty year lease on the property. Albert H. Wetten & Co. were brokers for both parties.

CONGRESS HOTEL PLANS A $30,000 NEW RESTAURANT

The first step in a modernization program involving an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars was announced yesterday for the Congress hotel. The present Eastman room at the Congress-Michigan corner of the first floor will be rebuilt from plans by Holabird & Root at a reported cost of $30,000. It will be rechristened the Congress casino.

Its main feature will be a circular bar with sides of thin glass rods and a huge glass ornament suspended above it shaped like a letter "S." A large mirror at the ceiling, reflecting the glass suspensions and the bar will give the impression of a chandelier. Gray shades will be used throughout, with golden colored metal curtains and Venetian blinds. All lighting will be indirect.

According to C. K. Dwinell, the transformation of the Eastman room into the Congress casino will be done without closing the room to guests. Other modernization steps will be announced later, he said.

ZANDER OPENS BRANCH OFFICE IN BARRINGTON

Henry G. Zander & Co. announce the opening of a branch office in the Barrington district. They have been appointed selling agents for "Barrington Acres," a tract owned by the Barrington Realty Syndicate half a mile from the Barrington Hills Country club. The syndicate is made up of James R. Cardwell, Frank Hecht, George E. Van Hagen, Harry Stillson Hart, Floyd L. Bateman, and others.

"The chief interest of these men is to keep the character of homes in the district at the present high level," said Karl M. Zander, who will have direct supervision of the new office. "The property is being offered in tracts of four acres or more, rigidly restricted to high class estate residences."

The new Zander office is on the syndicate property and was erected from plans by Robert Work, of Walcott & Work. The firm will do a general real estate business in addition to handling "Barrington Acres."

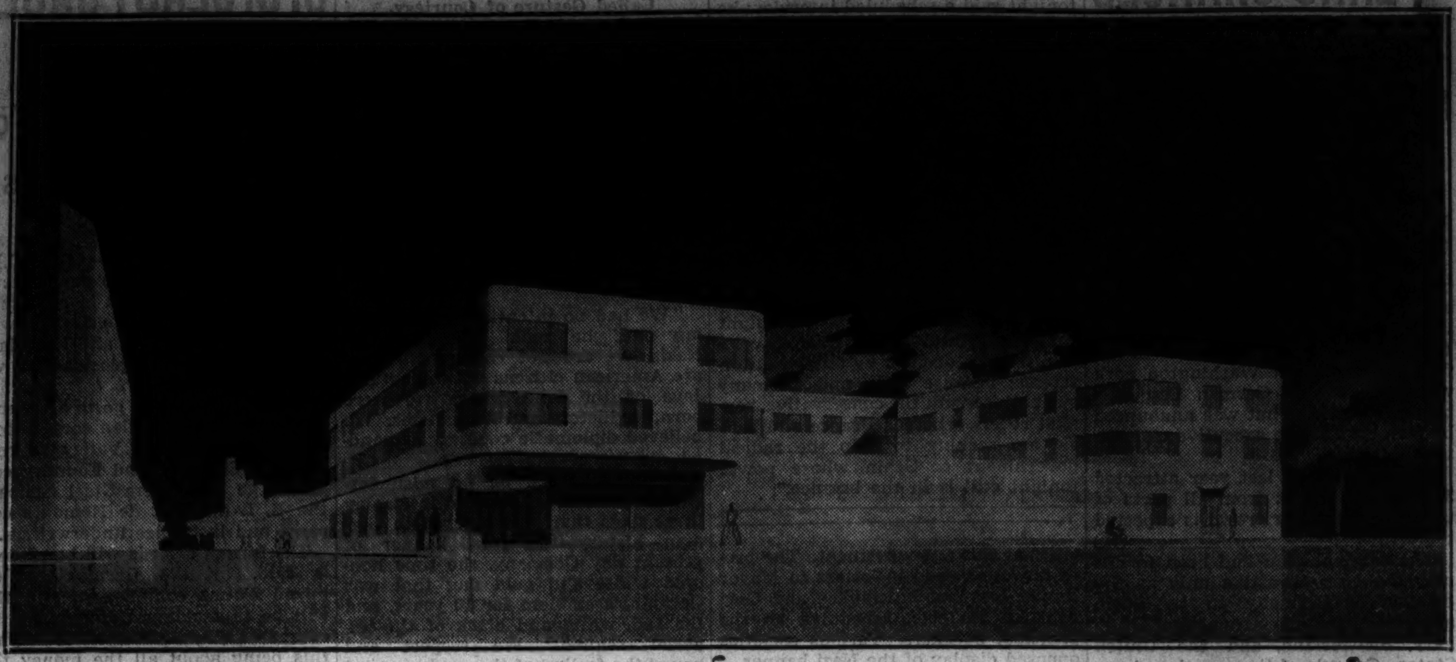
MODERN IMPROVEMENT FOR SUBURBAN COMMERCIAL CENTER

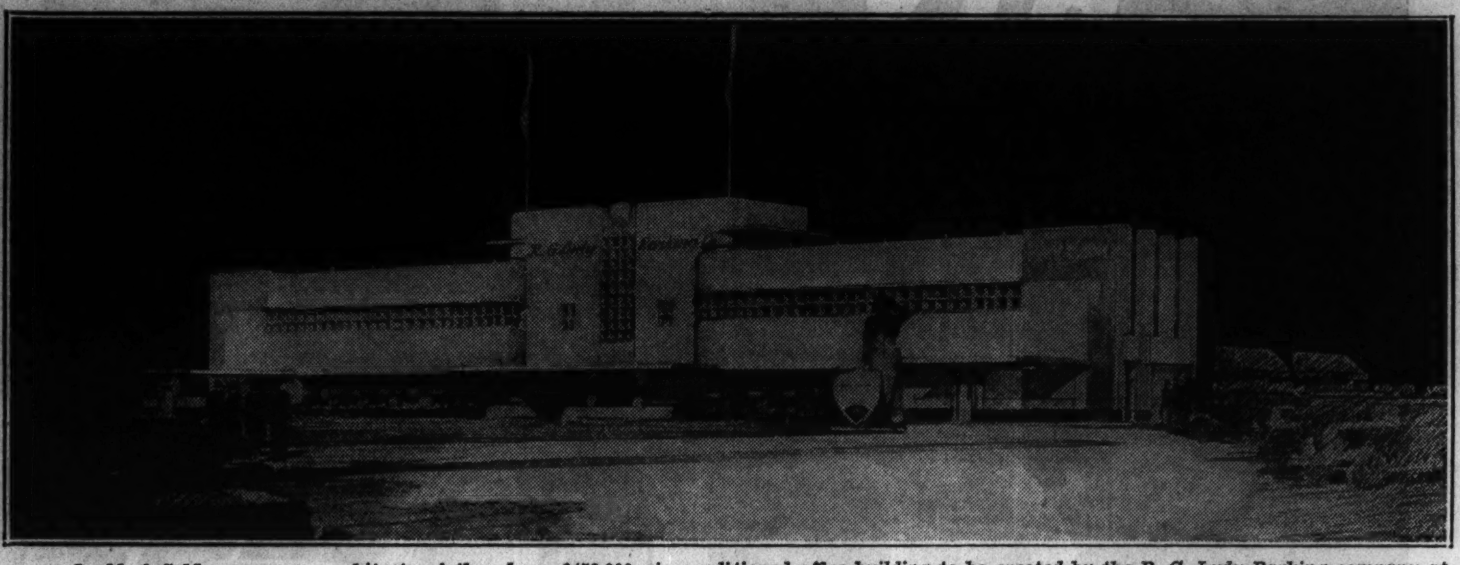


The Lawrence-Barton corporation has purchased the northwest corner of Lake street and Forest avenue, Oak Park, from Loews, Inc., and will erect the above air conditioned apartment hotel and store building from plans by Holabird & Root. It was reported the total investment in land and building will be approximately $750,000. The property fronts 246 feet on Lake and 194 feet on Forest.

The hotel section, occupying the upper two floors, will contain forty-eight suites of one, two, and three room kitchenettes, with entrance on Forest. A feature of the new building will be a concrete canopy in front of all the shops. Another feature will be the use for the first time in a business or apartment building in this area of curved glass corner windows, similar to corner windows in modern residences. Glass brick will be used along the Forest avenue wall of the corner store.

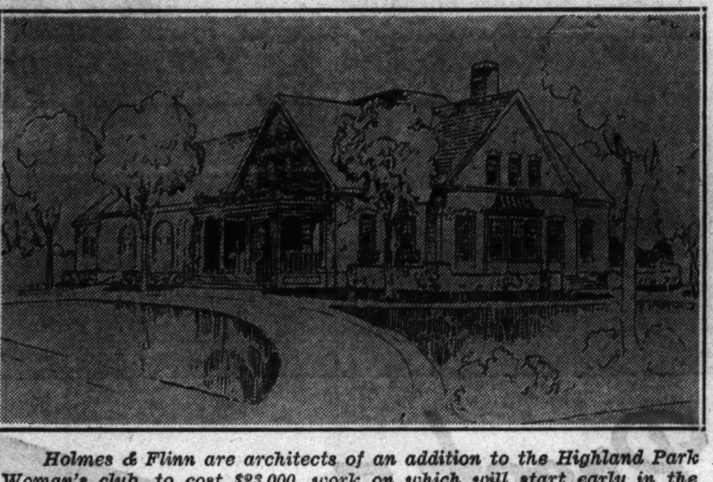
The property is just east of and adjoining the new Lake theater, operated by Essaness Theaters, Inc. The Duffy-Morris Construction company has the general contract for the new structure.

PARKING HEADQUARTERS FOR FINANCIAL DISTRICT



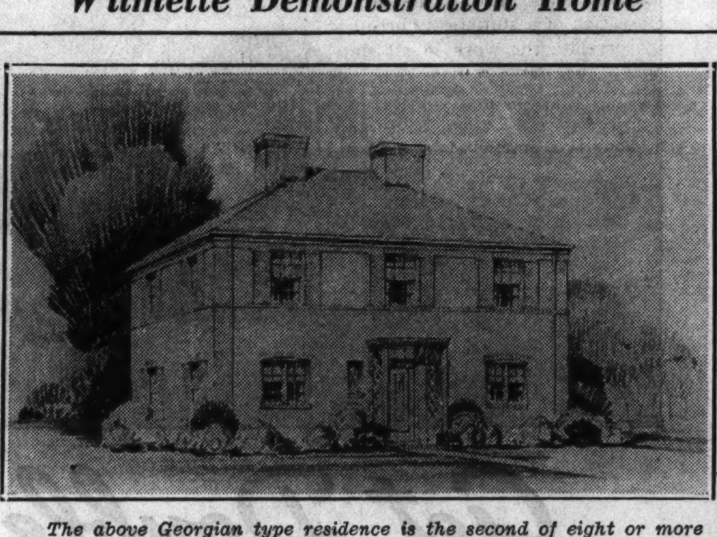
Loebl & Schlossman are architects of the above $150,000 air conditioned office building to be erected by the R. G. Lydy Parking company at 305-15 South La Salle and 304-12 South Clark, directly across from the Board of Trade building. It will be of light colored terra cotta and will comprise part of a double decked 600 car parking station. This will be the company's twenty-seventh Chicago parking unit. It now handles approximately 5,000 cars daily. More is told in an adjoining column.

Highland Park Woman's Club



Holmes & Flinn are architects of an addition to the Highland Park Woman's club, to cost $23,000, work on which will start early in the fall. The above picture shows the clubhouse at the southeast corner of Elm place and Sheridan road as it will appear when completed. An auditorium unit was erected several years ago. The new addition will contain a lounge, entrance lobby, office, etc. The building will be of red brick with wood trim. More is told about this project in the metropolitan section of today's TRIBUNE.

Wilmette Demonstration Home



The above Georgian type residence is the second of eight or more local demonstration houses erected in a nation-wide program of "Johns-Manville approved homes" under the sponsorship of the building material concern. It will be erected in the new west Wilmette section, on the north side of Chestnut avenue, between 21st and 23d streets, by James Crabb, builder, from plans by L. Morgan Yost, Wilmette architect. It will have eight rooms—living room, study, dining room, kitchen, and four upstairs bedrooms. It will be open for public inspection early in October.

Construction Gains Over the Nation

The newly organized bureau of motor carriers of the interstate commerce commission, which has jurisdiction over trucks, buses and other forms of automobile transport engaged in interstate business, yesterday leased space on the ninth floor of the Transportation building.

The bureau covers District No. 8, comprising Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, with L. C. Loughry in charge. At present the lessee has taken only 2,300 square feet but it is expected this new bureau eventually will occupy an entire floor. It already employs 25 persons.

Fifteen real estate men of Kankakee have formed the Kankakee County Real Estate board, with Harry L. Topping as president. John Krueger of Krueger & Son was elected vice president, and Harold Cooley of Cooley & Son secretary and treasurer. According to President Topping, the real estate business in Kankakee county has been improving steadily this year, with approximately $100,000 invested in new homes, $3,000,000 in federal and state work, and $500,000 in municipal work.

Lane Bryant Air Cools Its Chicago Store

Temperature control of 30,000 square feet of selling space will be formally inaugurated tomorrow morning by Lane Bryant, Inc., in its Chicago establishment in the Garland building, 101 North Wabash avenue. Following seven weeks of installation by the Carrier Engineering corporation the new air conditioning system, which was tried out during the week, will be officially put into operation for the comfort of customers and 300 employés.

According to E. I. Winkelman, general manager and secretary of the local corporation, approximately 30,000 cubic feet of chilled air will be circulated per minute through the basement, first floor, mezzanine floor, and second floor of the Lane Bryant store. Temperature will be maintained about 12 degrees cooler than the outside air and humidity will be kept at normal. The executive offices on the third floor also will be air conditioned.

The Lane Bryant store is one of a chain of 22 units throughout the United States. So far only the New York and Philadelphia stores have been air conditioned. The Chicago unit will be the third to enjoy summer coolness.

The corporation has approximately 4,000 employés in its various branches. The Chicago unit was established in 1901. It has been located in the Garland building since 1920.

REPORTS GAIN IN MORTGAGES FOR NEW HOMES

Dovenmuehle, Inc., the first private firm in this area to be qualified to make Federal Housing administration loans, yesterday reported that its volume of FHA business for the fourteen months up to July 1 had reached a total of $1,370,800. This sum represents 210 individual mortgages.

According to Harry C. Eigelberner, secretary of Dovenmuehle, Inc., 60 per cent of these loans, or 131, were for the construction of new homes. These loans totaled $768,850, or an average of $5,862. They were scattered through twenty-one suburbs, as well as Chicago.

The towns and the number of homes built were: Five each in Lake Forest, Highland Park, and Wilmette; four in Winnetka, River Forest, and Edgebrook; three in Northfield, Park Ridge, La Grange, and Evanston; two in Riverside; one each in Homewood, Kenilworth, Hinsdale, Elmhurst, Wheaton, and Geneva.

In Chicago mortgages were made for six new homes in Beverly Hills and three in Sauganash. In the southwest area sixty-two new homes were financed.

Contracts Awarded

Contracts awarded in Chicago the week of July 17 to 23, according to figures supplied by the F. W. Dodge corporation, totaled fifty-five, with a combined cost of $922,653. For the corresponding week last year there were thirty-seven contracts totaling $341,840. So far this year the total cost of contracts is $17,545,468, compared with $13,026,371 for the same period last year.

BUILDING SHOWS BROAD PICKUP IN 48 CITIES

Chicago Drops to Tenth Rank in List.

Residential and industrial building construction and alteration work in 48 American cities registered a broad pickup during the first six months of 1936 as compared with like periods of the preceding four years, according to a survey just made public by E. M. Craig, executive secretary of the National Association of Building Trades Employers.

E. M. CRAIG.

Compiled by Robert D. Steele, association statistician, the survey shows construction value in forty-four states for the first half of 1936 was $1,345,768,953, an 85 per cent gain over the $758,748,922 total of the corresponding 1935 period.

Los Angeles Is Leader.

Los Angeles led the nation in number of building permits for the first six months of both 1935 and 1936, with a big increase this year. It also surpassed all other cities in residential building, with 3,134 new homes since Jan. 1. New York was second with 2,654 homes. Chicago, which slid from sixth place last year to tenth this year in dollar value of building permits, broke ground for 332 homes as compared with 160 in the first half of 1935.

While Milwaukee was twelfth of American cities in dollar value of permits it ranked second in number of permits, with 11,503, against New York's 5,719, and Chicago's 670. Los Angeles had 13,732.

Although Chicago made a poor showing compared with most other big American cities, one of its Indiana suburbs, Hammond, topped the list with the biggest percentage gain. Its building permits for the first six months this year were $2,339,000 as compared with $365,000 for the same period last year, a gain of 600 per cent. Other Chicago suburbs also made a good showing in home building.

Don't Want to Quit Relief.

Craig said that several cities have a shortage of skilled building trades labor and pointed out that this situation was not entirely due to lack of replacements from the apprenticeship field.

"A retarding influence is the number of building artisans remaining on relief who are unwilling to return to self supporting construction projects in view of no definite assurance of steady work," he said.

"Private employment, they argue, is temporary, and when laid off much difficulty would result when seeking relief reinstatement."

BUYS TWO FLAT BUILDING.

Gustav Kappenmacher has purchased from Josephine Wester the two apartment building at 1422 Catalpa avenue at a reported $7,000, through John J. Kern, Inc.

CITY'S CHILDREN BOOST ICE FUND WITH BENEFITS

At Home or on Vacations, They Send Gifts.

No matter what they are doing or where they are this summer, the children of Chicago are giving benefits for the Tribune Free Ice fund.

Some, vacationing at home, hold lemonade sales, back yard circuses, basement theatricals, and amateur radio broadcasts in order that less fortunate children may have ice to keep their food and milk fresh. Others, vacationing on faraway camps and farms, also remember the ice fund.

Yesterday a donation of $4.51 was received by the free ice fund from four children at Five Trees farm, Harrisville, Mich. On faint green paper, with five green spruce trees for a letterhead, Andy and Janet Langtry and Jack and Nancy Christian, wrote:

"We issue a farm paper which comes out every fortnight. The paper sells for two cents. We also put on a play this evening. We are sending you the proceeds from both for your ice fund with our best wishes."

Six Give $1 Each.

Six persons, realizing that a gift of $1 will keep a baby's milk fresh for a week, sent in contributions of $1. Through contributions such as these TRIBUNE readers again this year are maintaining the reputation for charity which they have established during the 22 years' existence of the free ice fund.

Out at Camp Algonquin, 43 acre tract of woodland on the Fox river, near Cary, Ill., some 400 tenement mothers and children now are enjoying a two weeks' vacation as a result of the generosity of readers of THE TRIBUNE and of the United Charities.

When the present encampment is over another group will go out for two weeks. For many of the children it will be their first glimpse of the country. For many of the mothers it will be their first opportunity for complete rest in many years. A gift of $9.10 sends one child. A gift of $25.20 sents a mother and two children.

STUDY 3 TYPES OF LETTERS FOR STREET NAMES

Three types of sign lettering were being studied yesterday by Oscar E. Hewitt, commissioner of public works, and engineers of his department to decide which will be best for the proposed street signs for Chicago's 16,000 intersections. All signs heretofore have been made in capital letters, but the commissioner is considering a sign with the first letter in capitals and the remainder in small letters. A third type, with the entire name spelled out in small letters also is under consideration. An appropriation of $50,000 for the manufacture and erection of 46,000 signs is available, but the commissioner is deferring the advertisment for bids until the government acts on a request of $40,000 additional from PWA funds.

MOTHER SUES ON LIFE INSURANCE OF SLAIN BROKER

Suit to collect double indemnity on the $5,000 life insurance policy of Joseph W. Bolton, slain broker, was filed yesterday in the Superior court against the New York Life Insurance company by his mother, Mrs. Annie Bolton, and four brothers and four sisters.

His widow, Mrs. Mildred Bolton, was convicted of his murder and sentenced to die in the electric chair.

Mrs. Bolton was the beneficiary of the insurance policy. Under a new Illinois statute, said Attorney Robert L. Floyd, who filed the suit, the insurance becomes payable to the next of kin when the beneficiary kills the insured.

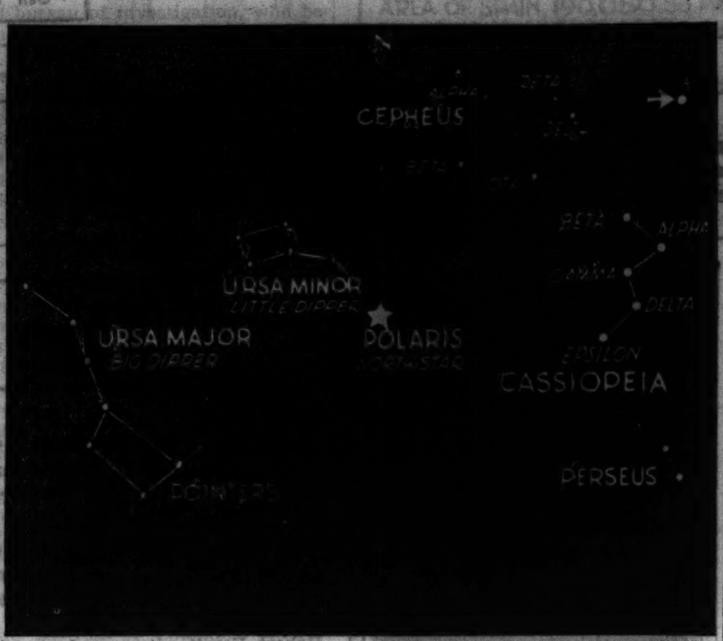
Where to Look for Peltier Comet



The newly discovered Peltier comet as it appears in the sky about midnight, after the moon has set. At this time it is most easily visible to the naked eye.

PELTIER'S COMET AT BRIGHTEST IN NEXT TEN DAYS

Midnight Best Time to View It.

Peltier's comet in the northeast sky will be the star performer of the heavens for the next ten days. It is entering its period of greatest visibility, according to Dr. Otto Struve, director of the Yerkes observatory at Williams Bay, Wis., who suggested that the best view may be obtained after the moon sets around midnight.

Peltier's comet was discovered last May by Leslie Peltier, a noted astronomer, who is a garage worker in Delphos, O. The comet may be located from Cassiopeia, one of the great constellations of the northern sky, which is shown in the accompanying diagram in relation to the great dipper and the North star.

Tips for Observers.

To find the comet the observer should run a line with his eye from the star Gamma through the star Beta to a point twice the distance between these stars as shown in the diagram. Then run another line to the right at right angles to the first line and just as long as the distance between Gamma and Beta. The comet should be seen at the end of this line.

The head of the comet is visible to the naked eye, according to Dr. Struve, but the tail may be seen only through field glasses. After reaching its peak of brightness on Aug. 4, the sky wanderer will decline for about a week to invisibility. It is now three times brighter than it was when it first became visible to the naked eye.

Unable to Predict Route.

Too little is known about the comet to predict its travels or its return, according to Dr. Struve. Comets move around the sun, but in eccentric orbits, far more elongated than the orbit of any other body in the solar system. Although almost all of the comets are believed to travel in al elliptical closed orbit, some are assumed to have parabolic or hyperbolic movement for the sake of mathematical computation, according to Dr. Struve.

Since many of them follow arcs thousands of years long, their paths cannot be observed. Although considered a part of the solar system, some or all may have been captured originally by solar attraction from outside stellar place.

Burn Out Fast Near Sun.

Since comets are loose collections of rock, metal, and gases with no permanent mass, they are in a progressive state of dissipation and burn themselves out especially rapidly when near the sun.

Near the sun the comet undergoes a process in the nature of evaporation, successive envelopes of vapor rising to form the nebulous haze called the coma and being gradually repelled by the sun to form the tail. Both the sun's light and the comet's own incandescent heat of undetermined electrical excitation make it visible.

Halley's Comet Spectacular.

Halley's comet is one of the most spectacular. Halley decided that the comet of 1682 was the same which had appeared in 1531 and 1607. He predicted its return in 76 years and it did return approximately on schedule. Its travels have been figured back to 87 B. C. with certainty. In 1835 and 1910 it was not as bright as it had been reputed to be by the observers of 1066 and 1456, occasions when it found historical mention. It was a splendid celestial spectacle in 1910, however.

RAID 30 TAVERNS IN INDIANA.

Valparaiso, Ind., July 25.—[Special.]—Forty state police, assisted by Porter county and Valparaiso city police, raided thirty taverns throughout the county last night. They arrested thirty-eight operators and confiscated fifty-three slot machines, seven punchboards, and one pin ball machine. Two operators of poker games were arrested.

Peltier's comet photographed with giant star camera at Cook observatory, Wynnewood, Pa. Photo was given one hour exposure, during which camera was kept trained on comet. Because it was moving across the sky, stars in background appear elongated. Comet's faint tail may be seen extending upward and to the right.

JUDICIAL GROUP CREATES BUREAU OF STATISTICIANS

Marking its fourth anniversary yesterday, the judicial advisory committee, created by the state legislature to suggest court reforms, decided on the creation of a statistical bureau to help correlate the work in all state, county, and city courts in Cook county.

The new bureau, which will be put into operation immediately, will aid in determining accurately what each court is accomplishing, and the condition of each court's docket, according to Judge Denis E. Sullivan of the Superior court, who is president of the council. It will also suggest possible reforms.

The council reëlected its four officers and named Judge Cornelius J. Harrington of the Criminal court to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Supreme Court Justice Floyd De Young. The officers reëlected are Judge Sullivan, Judge Harry M. Fisher of the Circuit court, vice president; Attorney Amos Miller, secretary, and John J. Healy.

Expect Pension Aid from U. S. Retroactive to July 1

James H. Andrews, state superintendent of old age assistance, announced yesterday that he expects federal assistance matching the maximum of $15 a month paid by the state to the aged would be retroactive to July 1. He said the pensioners probably will receive the deficiency from federal funds in August.

MUSIC FESTIVAL SEATS TO GO ON SALE TOMORROW

Available at Two Offices or by Mail.

BY PHILIP MAXWELL.

Reserve seat tickets at 50 cents each for the seventh Chicagoland Music Festival, sponsored by THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, to be held Saturday night, Aug. 15, in Soldiers' Field, will go on sale tomorrow by mail and at two Tribune Public Service counters, at 1 South Dearborn street and in the lobby of Tribune Tower.

The offices will be open daily from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m. and on Sundays from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. Mail requests accompanied by a check or money order, should be sent to the festival ticket office, room 530, in Tribune Tower. General admission tickets at 25 cents will be on sale only at Soldiers' Field the night of the festival.

6,000 Already Entered.

As about 100,000 persons attend the festival each summer those who wish to be assured of a good seat are advised to purchase their tickets immediately. Already more than 6,000 men, women, boys and girls have entered festival competitions and other activities of the festival program.

The program now being planned and to be announced within a few days will, it is hoped, surpass any of previous years. New names prominent nationally and internationally in the music world will be associated with the seventh festival. This list will include the young director of a symphony orchestra who holds a key spot in radio; world-renowned choral director, a pianist who is a most beloved radio star, and an opera prima donna.

Popular Features Retained.

The many features of the festival which have won approval each summer, such as the dance pageant by hundreds of Chicago girls, the grand march into Soldiers' Field by scores of bands and drum corps, the participation of 1,000 Negro singers in their stirring spirituals, and as a finale another great fireworks exhibition, all have been retained by the festival management.

The Minneapolis Tribune, which is coöperating with THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE in the sponsorship of the festival this summer, along with other central western newspapers, will hold a choral contest tonight at Lake Harriet in Minneapolis. Four choirs are entered and the winning mixed chorus will be sent to the Chicagoland finals which will be held for the festival Saturday in the Drake hotel.

15,000 Expected to Attend.

Choral conductors taking part in the Minneapolis contest are Prof. George Hultgren, Norman Barlindhaug, Mrs. Marie Smith and Frederic Buck.

An Iowa and two Indiana high school bands are entered in the juvenile band competition of the Chicagoland festival. The Iowa organization is the Waverly high school band, directed by Melvin Dean. The 30 boys and girls in this organization won a superior award in a state marching contest last year.

The two Indiana bands are from Crown Point and Wanatah. The 30 pupils from Crown Point are taught by Eldon Ready, who is supervisor of music in the schools there.

Archie Slusser directs the 30 Wanath players.

Returning to the scene of former triumphs, the Green Bay, Wis., Y. M. C. A. Glee club, directed by Earl E. Fisk, will come to Chicago Saturday to enter the male chorus contest.

The deadline for all festival contests will be Monday, Aug. 3, at 6 p. m. Signed entrance blanks must be in the festival headquarters, room 1418, Tribune Tower, at that time.

HOLDUP IN PROGRESS; PAIR SEIZED.

John Johnson, 38 years old, 3148 South State street, and Simon Hollingsworth, 36 years old, 3240 Prairie avenue, both colored, were arrested early yesterday as they were robbing Matthew Milanovich, 309 West 20th street, in an alley behind 3025 South State street.

Festival Entry

Thelma Gray Dittrich, 30 year old soprano of Sheboygan, Wis., who has entered the Chicagoland Music festival finals at the Drake hotel again this summer. Should she win first place she will sing a solo in Soldiers' field and will be offered radio and concert contracts.

EX-CONVICT DIES IN HOSPITAL OF 'RIDE' BULLETS

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—Joseph Potter, 35 years old, an ex-convict, was taken for a ride early today, riddled with bullets, and dumped out of an automobile, still alive, on a lonely road in Whitestone, Queens. He died in Flushing hospital.

A lawyer's business card with "Mary Daley, Westfield State Prison, Bedford Hills, N. Y.," penciled on the back, linked him with the arsenal gang, supposedly broken up when police raided a rooming house in West 90th street and seized seven men and three women.

Mary Daley is the wife of Frank Peraski, alias Frank Daley, "mad dog" leader of the killer mob.

All ten of the gang were convicted on May 1 and received long prison terms. Mary Daly was sentenced to two and a half to five years.

Potter was seen lying in the roadway in a swampy and deserted section of Queens by Mr. and Mrs. Herbert A. Eastmead, who were returning from visiting friends in Beechhurst.

Although two bullets were lodged in his neck and eight other bullets were in the upper part of his body, Potter was still conscious, but refused to talk.

Spanish Revolt.

Spain's nine day old civil war, a Fascist military and political rebellion against the radical republican government and communism, has a history bookful of precedent.

Ever since the seventeenth century collapse of Spain as a world empire the government has been the spoils of revolution. Democratic ideas of government took root after the peasants rose up against Napoleon's invasion in 1808. The industrial worker of today inherited the peasants' hate for their feudal lords and despotism. The endless revolts developed into a contest between leftists and rightists. A leftist may be any one from an intellectual liberal to a rabid anarchist, but politically leftists are those who profess to espouse the common man. A rightist is any one from a Catholic republican to an absolute monarchist, but he generally favors the upper classes. In Spain all political creeds, left or right, are principally means of obtaining power.

The new revolution is unique in being the Spanish republic's first major threat from army dictatorship. The army rebelled many times against the strain of fighting a king's wars and has repeatedly been the strongest government force. A modern army revolt grew out of Spanish losses in fighting the Riffs of Morocco in 1921. Gen. Primo de Rivera of Catalonia led a rebellion which forced King Alfonso XIII. to make him military dictator. De Rivera lasted until 1930. Then Maj. Ramon Franco, trans-Atlantic aviator and now Spanish embassy attaché in Washington, started the Jaca revolt. This failed, but, with the rise of leftists, contributed to the abdication of King Alfonso, the beginning of the second Spanish republic in 1931 [the first republic lasted for eight months of 1875] and the rise of Manuel Azana, republican rebel, as premier.

Communism, the successor of thirty years of anarchy among Spanish workers, took root, but rightists won control of the parliament in 1933. The leftists started the miners' revolt in Asturias [now Ovideo] province. Under its rightist officers the army put down the revolt at the cost of 3,500 lives.

Avenging of this deed was the intent of many radicals when the left republicans, Socialists, and communists' "Popular Front" won the parliamentary elections last Feb. 16. The rightists and José Gil Robles, Catholic party leader and former war minister, lost control. Azana, who had been a prisoner and an exile, returned as premier, and in May was made president because Niceto Alcala Zamora, once a fellow rebel, was too conservative.

The "Popular Front" had a parliament majority, but couldn't control it. The communists, Socialists, and syndicalists [direct action unionists] took advantage of the hamstrung republican cabinet to engineer riots and strikes which have continued for five months.

The impression was that Spain was evolving into a soviet state, but the rightists were deep in a typically Spanish conspiracy. A military coup was frustrated by secluding Gen. Francisco Franco, 43, Spain's youngest general, and brother of the aviator, as military governor of the Canary Islands. Many other rightist officers who fought the rebels at Asturias were demoted. These officers plotted to regain control by using the army "to wipe out communism." Apparently José Calvo Sotelo, veteran member of parliament and powerful supporter of the restoration of King Alfonso, was earmarked for army dictator of Spain. Sotelo was kidnaped and murdered on July 12 by leftists.

On July 17 the revolution began. Franco had gone to Spanish Morocco. [See map.] He soon was in control. Native troops, under their Spanish officers, took possession of the town of La Rache. The next day, Saturday, the military at Tetuan, capital of Spanish Morocco, imprisoned leftist authorities. A large number of Spanish officers are Fascist or monarchist minded. Their troops, however, are to some extent republican. But the Spanish Foreign Legion and dark skinned Moors, hated by Spaniards as the early invaders of the peninsula, were behind the officers.

Every garrison in Spain was a potential center of rebellion, and the republican and Fascist elements quickly gyrated to their leaders. Franco directed his attack on southern Spain at the ports of Algeciras and La Linea, near Great Britain's Rock of Gibraltar. Gen. Queipo de Llano rallied the rebel forces at Seville. Gen. Emilio Mola, stationed at Pamplona, mobilized the rebels in northern Spain. The goal was Madrid.

In Madrid José Giral, former minister of marine, replaced Diego Martinez Barrios, leftist speaker of the house, who had been premier for seven hours. Barrios succeeded Casares Quiroga, leftist successor of Azana. Socialists and communists everywhere pledged their support to the republican government and organized workers' armies which marched to the defense of Madrid.

On Sunday Franco sent his legionaries and Moors across the straits from Morocco to the province of Andalusia. The fighting at the Spanish ports was accompanied by aerial bombardment, both by rebel and loyal aviators. Franco had Spanish warships for his use until the republican sailors mutinied and either killed or imprisoned their commanders. Apparently most of the fleet turned against the rebels and sought to block further troop transports from Morocco. The bombardment of rebel ports, including Ceuta and Melilla in Morocco, continued yesterday. The revolt here appeared deadlocked.

Meanwhile Gen. Manuel Goded led a rebellion in Barcelona, great Spanish port and only Spanish city besides Madrid of over 1,000,000. President Luis Company of the independent Catalonia province directed the suppression of the revolt there and Barcelona became a center for a civilian offensive against the rebels.

Madrid's army rebellion came Monday. Loyal artillery men bombarded the rebel barracks until they surrendered. Simultaneously Gen. Mola consolidated control at Pamplona, Burgos, and Saragossa in the north and began the march on Madrid. Mola announced that he and Franco were the revolutionary leaders. At Koenigswart, Czechoslovakia, the exiled King Alfonso denied that his restoration was intended. It is a national movement to "rescue Spain from the leftist government," he said.

On Thursday Mola's rebel army reached the Guadarrama mountains, fifty miles north of Madrid. Government regular and civilian militia, planes, and artillery moved up to meet them. Three passes offered the rebels' only northern entrance to Madrid. The battling at each, accompanied by bombardment and bombing, continued through Friday and yesterday. Neither the government nor the rebel troops seemed adroit enough to make appreciable gains. One pass changed hands twice. [See main news section.] The outcome was seen by observers as the turning point of the revolution.

The fall of the rebel stronghold at Seville was reported Friday, but another report was that Franco's troops had reached Toledo, north of Seville, and would threaten Madrid from the south.

Accurate knowledge of the entire struggle was limited by censorship and blockage of communications. There was no way of counting the dead. The total was probably in the thousands.

Washington feared for 1,582 Americans in Spain and sent two warships and a merchant ship to the ports of Bilbao, Gibraltar, and Barcelona. At San Sebastian, near Bilbao, the loyalists and rebels were locked in a fierce battle all week. Yesterday the ships of the United States, Great Britain, and France combined to evacuate their nationals. Americans at Madrid were isolated at the embassy.

"I Accept."

The race to see who will be the next President of the United States got off to an official start Thursday evening when Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas said: "I accept the nomination of the Republican party."

At the words, "I accept," a crowd of 80,000 that jammed the statehouse grounds in Topeka for the notification ceremonies halted the nominee for several minutes with a wild demonstration of approval.

Gov. Landon stressed the point that the constitutional form of American government should not be changed by summary action of the Chief Executive. He said the New Deal had been granted extraordinary powers, but only with the understanding they were to be temporary measures.

"Now it becomes our duty to examine the record as it stands," he asserted. "The record shows that these measures did not fit together into any definite program of recovery. Judging by the things that make us a nation of happy families, the New Deal has fallen far short of success."

Landon blamed the New Deal for retarding recovery by scaring the small business man who "lacks confidence in the soundness of federal policy; who is afraid of what may come next."

He assured the needy that there will always be relief for those who must have it, but promised that the Republican party will not use relief as a means of building a political machine. Along with relief, Landon said, must go a workable system of unemployment insurance and old age security measures.

But also, he said: "Our party holds nothing to be of more urgent importance than putting our financial house in order. For the good of all of us, we must reëstablish responsibility in the handling of government finances."

The nominee told the farmers they would receive benefit payments, but not under a program of scarcity. He said farm benefit payments under his administration would be limited to what he called "the family type of farm."

To the laboring man should be given the chance to join, or not to join, any type of union he prefers, without intimidation from employers or any one else, Landon said.

Regarding the constitution, the governor asked: "Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive, or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

To the first half of the question the crowd roared: "No."

"The Republican party," Landon continued, "does not believe that the people wish to abandon the American form of government. We propose to maintain the constitutional balance of power between the states and the federal government."

Landon was permitted a day of rest before his speech because it had to be printed Tuesday, to allow for advance distribution to newspapers all over the country. When he was not in his office receiving callers he spent the time with Mrs. Landon and Peggy Anne, his oldest child, who had come home from their vacation at Estes Park, Colorado, to be with the governor at the high point of his life.

Despite the heat, thousands of visitors lined Kansas avenue, main thoroughfare of Topeka, to watch 10,000 others parade in a demonstration of the pioneer spirit behind Landon's candidacy.

The next day Mrs. Landon and Peggy Anne hurriedly left for the cool Colorado mountains again to escape Topeka heat.

As they were departing, John Hamilton, Republican national chairman, gleefully surveyed his handiwork to date and announced that Gov. Landon will make a short speaking tour of the east "about Aug. 20." It was decided the governor will open the tour with a speech at West Middlesex, Pa., his birthplace, because his mother wanted to be with her mother when Alf arrived.

Reverberations.

The reactions to Gov. Landon's acceptance speech were immediate and numerous.

Democratic Chairman Farley accused Landon of dodging anything positive and said the speech tied Landon to the Liberty league.

Republican Chairman Hamilton said reports from many sections indicated the speech had been "splendidly received."

Senator Rush D. Holt [Dem., W. Va.] was "very much disgusted with the administration." He praised Landon's speech.

Representative Chester C. Bolton [Rep., O.] was "particularly impressed with that part [of the acceptance speech] where he [Landon] pledged return to the constitutional form of government."

Labor Leaders William Green and John L. Lewis joined in assailing Landon's treatment of the labor question. They accused him of favoring company unions. [See Labor.]

Republican newspapers were unanimous in approving the speech. Democratic papers were unanimous in disapproval. Papers listed as Independent generally commended Landon.

Nancy Jo, 4, and John Cobb Landon, 2, telegraphed their father from Estes Park: "Heard your speech fine. Give our love to mother."

Democrats.

Democratic Chairman Farley ridiculed claims of Republican Chairman Hamilton that Landon will carry New York state in November. "You'll be hearing a lot of wild predictions from Hamilton all during the campaign," Farley said.

Farley indignantly denied that the Democrats were starting a "whispering campaign" against Landon on racial issues. Hamilton had asserted that Democrats in the east were whispering that Landon was anti-Jewish, and Democrats in the west were whispering that Landon's middle name, Mossman, meant he was part Jewish.

"That's not the way we run a campaign," Farley said.

Frank Murphy, furloughed governor general of the Philippines, who is running for the Democratic nomination for governor in Michigan, told Farley that the Lemke party [see Third Party] will not hurt Roosevelt in Michigan and that the President will carry the state.

Francis B. Sayre Jr., grandson of President Woodrow Wilson, was appointed president of the Roosevelt First Voters' league. He said he was "proud to head the league, which will give opportunity to 9,000,000 youths of America to insure the reëlection of our friend, the President."

Democratic national headquarters announced that six Democratic governors, including Gov. Henry Horner of Illinois, will each speak for 9 minutes in a reply to Gov. Landon's acceptance speech. The governors will talk over a nation-wide radio hookup Tuesday evening.

Priest's Apology.

Father Coughlin published an apology to President Roosevelt for having called Mr. Roosevelt a "liar." The apology was printed Friday in the radio priest's paper, Social Justice. The name calling by Father Coughlin occurred when he was addressing the Townsend convention July 16 in Cleveland.

Before the Townsendites Father Coughlin called Roosevelt "the great betrayer and liar." Later in the speech he called him "Franklin [Double Crossing] Roosevelt." No apologies were offered for the slurs other than "liar."

By the week's end there had been no comment from the President on the apology.

Meanwhile, Bishop Michael Gallagher of Detroit, the priest's superior, arrived in Rome yesterday. He is to visit the pope. He denied the papal visit was to be about Father Coughlin. He defended the priest's activities. [See main news section.]

Third Party.

Representative William Lemke got little applause when he told the Townsend old age pension convention in Cleveland last Sunday that he favored revolving old age pensions. Lemke did not mention the Townsend scheme by name.

In New York the candidate denied that he was attempting to draw votes from Roosevelt for Landon's benefit. Lemke said he didn't care where he got the votes as long as he got them.

The Drouth

Farmers from California to the Hudson river valley and from Texas to the Dakotas watched glumly last week for the rain that did not come. Scattered showers fell here and there, but very few areas received enough rainfall to help the crops that were practically a ruin anyway.

Particularly hard hit were the states of the northwest territory where prairie fires, some of them set by drunken Indians, wiped out the last hopes of many farmers. Shipping rates on feed for cattle in the territory were cut to less than half of normal. County after county, from Missouri northward, was placed on the New Deal's emergency drouth list, with grants flowing in their direction. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said that his department, in connection with the Works Progress administration, has $85,000,000 available for the relief of drouth sufferers.

Yesterday rain and cooler weather were in prospect in some sections. [See main news section.]

Candidate William Lemke [See Politics] had a solution for it all. Build from 200,000 to 250,000 lakes in the drouth area, he said, without offering any suggestions on where to obtain the water for them.

The City

Dog Bites.

Dr. Herman Bundesen, president of the city board of health, declared that the dog bite situation was the worst ever. Dog bite cases since Jan. 1 totaled 7,843, compared to 5,917 for the same period last year. City and county officials Friday renewed their campaign against dangerous dogs.

Robert Forejt, city pound superintendent, announced he would begin killing impounded, unclaimed dogs as fast as possible. More than 180 were killed yesterday. [See main news section.] The city council passed an ordinance permitting killing of dogs not claimed within 24 hours. Dr. Bundesen said there were about 50,000 homeless dogs at large. Only 24,000 dog licenses have been sold this year. Because of the congestion at the pound he declared that biting dogs under police observation will be kept at their owners' homes.

Joseph L. Moss, director of the county bureau of public welfare, said he would recommend that anti-rabies serum be provided without cost by the county to all who apply for it. This followed the death Wednesday of Anthony Scharf Jr., 4, of rabies with which he was infected when he was bitten June 14. The boy's mother and grandmother testified at the inquest that there was a three day delay in administration of the serum because Miss Ruth Coleman of the public welfare bureau refused to provide free serum. Miss Coleman replied that the family had refused to give the necessary proof of inability to pay. Moss defended Miss Coleman but said, "It's a bad law."

Taxes.

Chicago taxes are going up. That was the unpleasant news for taxpayers when County Clerk Michael J. Flynn on Wednesday announced the tax rate for 1935 in the city and county.

The county clerk's office began preparing bills for mailing by Aug. 15 but on Thursday Flynn halted work. He announced that three errors in the tax rates had been found. Financial experts from each of the six major local governments—the city, the county, the sanitary district, the school board, the park district, and the forest preserve—reëxamined their figures. No other errors were found and the billing was resumed Friday. The total tax bills were reduced by $600,000.

Meanwhile civic organizations criticized public officials on the basis of the announced tax rates. These showed that assessed valuations of Chicago real estate decreased 5 per cent from 1934 to 1935, but that the average real estate tax bill in the city would be 17 per cent above that of 1934 with the residential districts undergoing a larger than average increase. The Chicago rates were from 16 to 29 per cent above those of 1934, while the rates for outlying townships were little changed.

The total taxes on real estate, personal property, railroad and capital stock asked by the six local governments were $180,040,528, compared to $167,950,891 for 1934. This was over 6 per cent higher than 1934. Real estate owners stood to pay 70 per cent of the total tax bill compared to 65 per cent in 1934. The 25 per cent decrease in personal property valuations was a large factor in the shift. Increases in city and board of education taxes more than offset the decrease in valuations.

Relief.

More than 1,000 employés of the Chicago relief administration, many of them worse off than their relief clients, received assurance Friday of their first pay since July 1. After the state on the basis of recent legislation turned relief over to local governments Chicago found that neither state sales tax allotments nor the 30 cent city property tax provided for relief [30 cents on each $100 assessed property valuation] could be used for administration costs. Leo M. Lyons, city relief commissioner, has kept his staf working on hope.

But Friday the Illinois Emergency Relief commission agreed to advance federal funds for the payment of relief workers. Up to $125,000 will be loaned to the city.

Lyons and Ald. J. M. Arvey, chairman of the city council finance committee, finally obtained an interview with Gov. Horner on Thursday when he returned from a Wisconsin vacation. The governor did not discuss Chicago's plea for a greater diversion of state funds to cover its relief shortage. He indicated, however, that he had no objection to legislative action which attorneys declare is necessary to permit the use of local funds for administration. The legislature will meet Aug. 4. Bills are being prepared that would increase the division of sales tax moneys for relief. [See main news section.]

The city council passed ordinances Wednesday appropriating $5,800,000 for relief and authorizing the sale of tax warants based on the adoption two weeks ago of the 30 cent property tax. The city still is far short of raising the $36,000,000 needed annually for relief.

The WPA gave 70,000 Chicago workers an hourly pay raise last week, but they still will get no more than $55 a month for unskilled labor to $94 for technical and professional work. Their hours will be reduced an average of 15 per cent. Thus federal legislation providing for prevailing wages for WPA workers was enforced without increased cost. Some skilled union workmen will need only 48 hours instead of the former 130 to make $85 a month.

City Notes.

An explosion wrecking a narrow three story brick building at 1406 North Halsted street late Wednesday killed four persons and injured seven others, two of whom were still in serious condition yesterday. Eight were employés in the building. It housed the National Fur Dressing and Dyeing Company, Inc., which prepares raw pelts for the fur market. Forty-five employés had left for the day a half hour before. Company officials declared that none of the chemicals used were inflammable. Three years ago the plant was bombed twice. The fire prevention bureau blamed the blast on an explosion of sawdust used to clean furs.

Water causing a $250,000 loss flooded the sub-basements of the Union station and the postoffice building Tuesday when a 36 inch main burst 40 feet underground at Canal and Harrison streets. All electric light, telephone, and elevator service in the station was crippled. Dispatching of trains was held up. Postal employés managed to remove mail bags and packages before the water rose to a depth of 7 feet. A battery of pumping engines needed three days to remove the water.

An executive order signed Monday by the President, and released Wednesday at the White House, makes all postmaster appointments in the future subject to civil service examination. The order affects 13,730 postmasterships of the first, second, and third classes as fast as vacancies occur. Fourth class postmasterships are already under civil service.

Mr. Roosevelt's order decrees that postmasters whose terms expire, and who are recommended for reappointment, must pass a civil service test. The examination will not be competitive. Thus a candidate for reappointment will have only to pass a minimum grade. The order also provides that civil service employés may be chosen for promotion to postmasterships if they, too, pass a noncompetitive examination.

According to the order, where a vacancy is not filled by reappointment or promotion of a subordinate, the civil service commission shall hold an open competitive examination. The person with the highest rating will then be appointed, unless character or residence disqualifies him.

The order, ostensibly aimed at setting up the protection of the merit system for ambitious postal employés, has loopholes, according to critics. These loopholes, they say, will still enable the administration to use the postoffice for patronage. According to a survey given out Thursday, nearly 1,200 postmaster vacancies will be affected by the President's order.

President Roosevelt, aboard the schooner Sewanna, on Tuesday began the second week of his fishing cruise in Nova Scotian waters. Up to then, and in fact up to yesterday, he had not enjoyed much good fortune either with fish or weather. Three of his sons, James, John, and Franklin Jr., are with him.

Probably the week's most exciting event for the President was Gov. Alf M. Landon's acceptance speech Thursday night. The President heard it via radio aboard the Sewanna at Yarmouth, N. S. He had no comment for the press.

Several times during the week the President received official mail carried by seaplanes and by the destroyer Hopkins, the latter part of the presidential flotilla. The President plans to visit Campo Bello, his mother's summer home in New Brunswick, and later—July 31—to visit Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada, in Quebec. Yesterday Mr. Roosevelt's boat was headed toward the mainland. [See main news section.]

J. Edgar Hoover, head of the federal bureau of investigation, who became angry two weeks ago on learning that secret service agents were investigating his department, became angrier still Tuesday when he learned that somebody was investigating his "brokerage accounts." He said that such an inquiry was a waste of time and effort. "I haven't any brokerage accounts," he said. He warned that he would try to find out the identity of the investigator. Hoover's complaint about the secret service quiz led the treasury department to investigate. Secret service is under treasury jurisdiction. To this end Thomas J. Callaghan, head of the Chicago secret service, and Harry Schaetzel of the same office were questioned. Joseph E. Murphy, assistant chief of the service, also was examined. The secret service inquiry was said to deal with the allegedly wanton killing of public enemies, among them John Dillinger, by Hoover's men. According to the treasury, the secret service would have no right to make such an inquiry.

The first charged he had delivered certain information on national defense to the Japanese on Aug. 1, 1934; the second, that he attempted to give information to a Japanese agent. Farnsworth has denied wrongdoing. He was discharged from the navy some years ago for "scandalous conduct."

It was revealed at Melbourne, Australia, Tuesday that a Guinea Airways plane had made a 450 mile trip over the wild jungles and mountains of Papua to drop food to marooned members of the Archbold scientific expedition. The plane made a nonstop round trip flight of 900 miles in eight hours, much of the way above mountains 8,000 to 14,000 feet high. The Archbold expedition, sponsored by the American Museum of Natural history, was marooned because of the wrecking of its own plane.

James Daniels, 31 years old, of Laurel, Miss., was killed when his plane crashed while he was "dusting" cotton from the air near Bryan, Tex. He was flying low, spraying cotton with insecticide at the time of the accident.

Medicine

Dr. W. F. Wells, instructor in sanitary science at Harvard university, visualized air sanitation as the logical companion of water sanitation on the basis of five years' study of influenza, an epidemic disease as yet uncontroled.

Dr. Wells and H. W. Brown, research fellow, reported that they had isolated influenza virus in the air and killed it with ultra-violet rays. Dr. Wells said that when an influenza victim sneezes the residue floats in the air for at least 30 minutes.

"The great reduction of intestinal disease, through water sanitation since the turn of the century," he said, "might prompt us to hope that some of the diseases which are transmitted through the respiratory tract may be checked by methods for purifying air supplies."

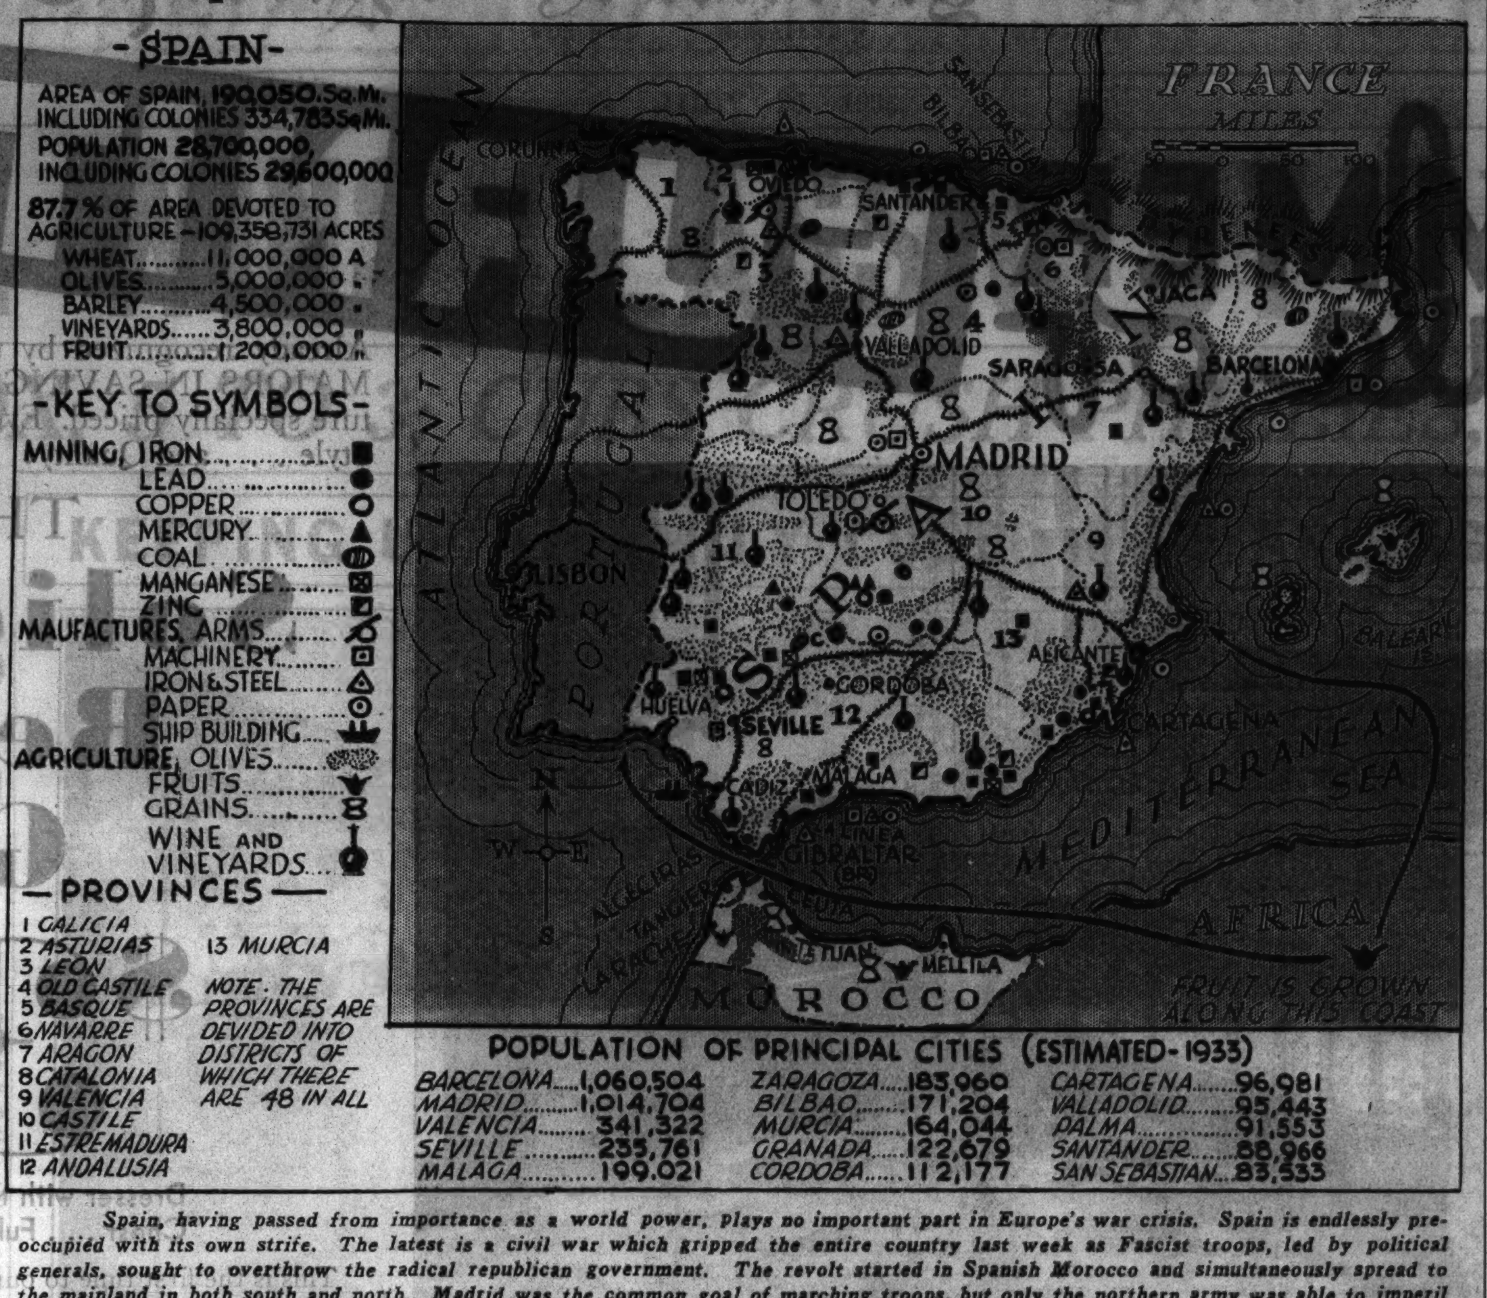
Dr. Philip Spence exhibited a shoe that fits like a glove at the foot section of the American Osteopathic association's convention in New York. The shoe, which cost $50 to have made, has five separate, flexible divisions for the toes. "It isn't practical to manufacture commercially," said Dr. Spence, "but I want to demonstrate that foot ailments can be successfully treated through shoes . . . that fit as a glove fits the hand."

Dr. Spence debunked the belief that the human foot is an arch. "There are springs made by muscles, ligaments and the bones suspended by them in the form of an arched and cantilever truss."

Cousin Kelly

Eighteen cousins of James Thomas Kelly, the ex-convict miser who died at the age of 61 in a West Madison street flophouse on Feb. 26, 1935, are the heirs to his mysterious $140,000 estate. This was the report of Attorney Irwin N. Walker, appointed as a special commissioner, to Probate Judge John F. O'Connell. More than fifty unsuccessful claimants will have 20 days to file objections. The source of Kelly's income, including bonds, deeds, and cash, was never determined. After being released from Joliet penitentiary in 1911 after serving eight years for manslaughter, Kelly worked for many years as a news "butcher" on Chicago-St. Louis trains. This scarcely could have made him wealthy. Investigators surmised he had hoarded burglary loot. Forgery of a will upon his death sent his landlady, an attorney, two undertakers, and two others to jail for a year for contempt of court. The attorney and one of the undertakers also were sentenced to prison for conspiracy and attempting to bribe a juror. Taxes and court expenses will leave only about $36,000 for the rightful heirs.

Spain, a Land of Revolution



Spain, having passed from importance as a world power, plays no important part in Europe's war crisis. Spain is endlessly preoccupied with its own strife. The latest is a civil war which gripped the entire country last week as Fascist troops, led by political generals, sought to overthrow the radical republican government. The revolt started in Spanish Morocco and simultaneously spread to the mainland in both south and north. Madrid was the common goal of marching troops, but only the northern army was able to imperil Madrid within the week. The predominant agricultural as well as the industrial interests of Spain are demarked in the map. The peasant farmers divided their allegiance, but thousands united against the more aristocratic rebels. (See story on preceding page.)

Bull Run.

While 40,000 persons looked on, 2,000 troops on Tuesday reënacted the civil war battle of Manassas, or "Bull Run," in Virginia. The occasion was the 75th anniversary of that battle. The sham fight began at the hour the original one started, and covered the same ridges and the same rolling fields. There were cavalry charges, and there were assaults by waves of men in blue and gray. There were the roar of cannon, the rattle of rifles, and the shrill call of bugles.

FRESH AIR "POISON."

Three hundred Bowery derelicts were recovering Thursday from fresh air poisoning they received from an excursion trip on Long Island sound the previous two days. The passport was sobriety and neatness.

Foreign Notes

Poland's ten year nonaggression treaty with Germany was placed under a severe strain last week. Following up his recent demand for freedom from league of nations control, Dr. Arthur Karl Greiser, president of the Nazi controled senate of the Free City of Danzig, issued decrees startling Poland. Observers said the decrees violated Danzig's constitution.

The new laws included [1] dissolution of any organization spreading propaganda against Nazi Danzig, [2] prohibition of court appeals on police measures limiting the right of assembly, free press, and free speech, [3] prohibition of Jewish ritual slaughtering of meat, and [4] imposition of three months' "protective custody" on persons "endangering the public peace."

Poland wants a free Danzig because it is an important seaport on Poland's war created corridor to the sea.

France demanded that the league council meet immediately to deal with the Nazis' clutch on Danzig. Capt. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, turned down the demand. The British government indicated that a request for assistance was up to Poland, which had asked the league to be left alone in settling with the Nazis.

Biggest action in Poland was the declaration of Gen. Edward Rydz-Smigley, successor of Pilsudski as the political military leader of Poland, that Pilsudski legionnaires would not meet Aug. 6. Rydz-Smigley is determined to solve national problems without the support of the veterans.

President Kamal Ataturk of Turkey enjoyed an unusual rôle last week—that of a government leader who had scrapped a treaty by honest means. Eight nations at the Montreux [Switzerland] convention signed an agreement permitting Turkey to rearm and refortify the Dardanelles.

These straits leading from the Ægean sea to the Black sea demilitarized by the Lausanne treaty of 1923, post-war companion to the Versailles treaty. Russia and Japan had clashed during the month-old convention on their respective rights to send warships through the Dardanelles. Signers of the Lausanne treaty who approved of Turkey's remilitarization were Great Britain, Japan, France, Russia, Greece, Rumania, Jugo-Slavia, and Bulgaria.

The 20 year agreement stipulated complete freedom of the straits for foreign merchant marine in either war or peace, providing they were not assisting a belligerent. The Russian navy was given complete peacetime freedom of the straits but the warships of nations outside are restricted. Nations at war would be prohibited from using the straits unless acting for the league of nations or under the obligations of a league indorsed treaty of which Turkey was a signer. Japan signed with reservations, since it is not a member of the league.

Turkey immediately moved 50,000 soldiers, artillery, battleships, and submarines into the Dardanelles.

King Edward VIII., who escaped a pistol attack two weeks ago, predominated British news again. The house of commons was put into an uproar when Jock McGovern, Independent Laborite, demanded: "Why does not King Edward support his mother? He must be a despicable individual." This climaxed a two day debate on England's dole system, which bans families from the dole if immediate members are capable of supporting them. One of McGovern's colleagues, George Buchanan, called Sir John Simon, home secretary, to his face "a damned liar" and Campbell Stephen, another Laborite, called the minister of labor "a dirty contemptible rat" and Simon "a lying scoundrel." This resulted in the ousting of all three. The suspension will last a week.

Two London newspapers, the Evening News and Daily Express, were cited for contempt of court on the charge of libeling George Andrew McMahon, the man who pointed the gun at King Edward a week ago Thursday. They had referred to the past career and character of McMahon. Their descriptions of McMahon were declared to be violations of Britain's strict libel laws against commenting on the past career and character of an accused person. Any mention of attempted assassination would be libelous. Friday McMahon was arraigned on three charges. Two were based on 100 year old laws prohibiting armed threats to the king. His attorney said he was mentally unbalanced.

King Edward was host at his first garden reception at Buckingham palace but rain drove inside the 1,000 notable guests, including wives of American New Dealers and fifteen other Americans. The king held a second garden party the next day and the sun shone.

King Edward set up a special commission to represent the "equal interests of the dominions" in arrangements for the coronation ceremony on May 12, 1937. This is the first dominion coronation commission in history. When the late King George V. was crowned the dominions had less independence.

Southern China's revolt against the Nanking government, which started last month when Canton troops marched north as the "anti-Japanese salvation army," collapsed. Gen. Chen Chi-tang, Cantonese war lord, fled to Hongkong and Nanking troops were reported to have entered Canton without resistance.

Financial troubles were blamed for collapse of the Canton government. Nanking officials immediately began a search for a $100,000,000 silver hoard supposed to have been in Chen Chi-tang's possession. Nanking, at least, is expected to take over Kwangtung province's 300 fighting planes and extensive artillery and naval equipment.

Meanwhile, Japanese newspapers charged that the United States' agreement to buy $26,000,000 worth of silver from China provided for a loan to purchase military equipment. Military authorities were said to be responsible for the story. The state department at Washington denied its truth.

Great Britain, France, and Belgium held a preview meeting in London of the Locarno treaty signers' conference that they would like to hold. This would include Germany and Italy, the other two signers. Invitations were sent. The Locarno trouble began when Hitler remilitarized the Rhineland in March, violating the treaty. The new Austrian-German friendship treaty is a fresh worry. A German foreign office spokesman received the invitation sympathetically, but said a reply would await Hitler's decision. The spokesman declared Germany regarded the questionnaire upon Germany's peace intentions as obsolete.

About 10,000 political prisoners in Austria were freed upon the decree of President Wilhelm Miklas. Many were convicted in the July, 1934, Nazi revolt in which former Chancellor Engelbert Dollfus was slain, and in the February, 1934, "Socialist revolution." The decree was part of Austria's obligation under the recent treaty signed with Hitler of Germany. Royalists meanwhile renewed hope for restoration of Archduke Otto to an Austrian Hapsburg throne. Prince Ernst von Starhemberg went to Venice and was expected to discuss the restoration with the former Empress Zita, Otto's mother.

LONG, LONG BRIDGE.

It's an eight mile walk from San Francisco to Oakland across the new 77 million dollar bay bridge and there are no rest stations or drinking fountains along the way. It would be easy for a child to crawl through the railing and drop to the water 200 feet below. Those are some of the reasons bridge authorities gave Friday for refusing to allow pedestrians to inspect the bridge, which will be opened to trafic later this year.

Science

Each element of nature gives off light of a particular wave length and color when it burns. The blaze of any compound, however, is a mingling of light from many elements. This light can be separated into its respective colors, lines and wave lengths, or spectrum, by means of a spectroscope. Thus, a scientist can detect the elements of a substance by analyzing its flame. New discoveries in spectroscopy were the subject of a conference at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Cambridge last week.

David Richardson, research fellow physicist of M. I. T., reported a major advance—motion pictures of the spectrum. Spectrographs have long been used to take still pictures of the sun and stars. The motion spectrograph now provides an accurate analysis of the entire combustion of a substance, hitherto impossible. Richardson demonstrated by burning a manufactured food before his camera. The spectrograph showed each of the elements, burning in series. As the flame died, there appeared a quantity of lead atoms in the food, unknown to any one.

J. S. Foster of McGill university described how he used the spectrograph to detect boron as the probable cause of dry rot in turnips upon the request of the Canadian government. Foster burned a known quantity gold powder with pulverized turnips to measure the quantity of boron. The relative duration of the gold and boron flames was the basis of the deduction.

Dr. O. W. Wulff of the United States bureau of chemistry announced first visible proof of the theory that atoms vibrate and spin in a "dancing motion" peculiar to their varying types. Invisible, infrared or heat rays were used in photographing the atomic wiggling. The motion was recorded on the plates as shadows as the atoms vibrated and interfered with the passage of heat. Dr. G. R. Harrison of M. I. T., chairman of the conference, appraised the new analysis as one of the spectacular advances in spectroscopy.

A comet is a luminous heavenly body of irregular shape, often with a long tail, which follows an orbit about the sun. It is not known whether comets originate in the solar system or have been drawn into it by the sun. There are more than 120,000 comets in the solar system.

Halley, working with Newton's law of gravity, was the first to establish that comets reappear regularly. He accurately predicted the 76 year appearances of the comet bearing his name, last seen in 1910. Encke's comet has the shortest known period of return, 3.3 years, while the cycle of the longest takes a million years.

Last Tuesday the latest of comets to attract attention in the United States became visible nightly in the northeastern sky. It was discovered May 14 by Leslie Peltier, a garage worker and amateur astronomer of Delphos, O. It was Peltier who last June discovered an exploding star. Peltier's comet was about 50 million miles from the earth when he first saw it but by Aug. 4, when it reaches the height of its brilliancy [about the same as the dimmer stars in the Big Dipper], the comet will be 15 million miles away.

Nerve.

Eastern doctors are calling Joseph Della Fave Jr., 14 years old, a real hero. Joseph fell into a dough mixer in a bakery in Union City, N. J. His arms were crushed. On Monday surgeons in North Hudson hospital, Weehawken, amputated both arms. Joseph's parents called on him Tuesday. They burst into tears. He told them not to cry. "I don't need arms," he said. "I have brains. I can make my living without arms." The doctors predicted he will, too.

TURTLE DUCKS SOUP.

Chicago Saloon Keeper Gustav Beran was in the hospital Friday with a bullet hole in his foot after attempting to shoot the head off a turtle he captured to make soup for his customers. The turtle ducked.

On June 22 the trial of Robert James, Los Angeles barber, began before a jury on a charge that he had first inserted his seventh wife's foot in a box of live rattlesnakes and then, impatient because she did not die, drowned her in a bathtub before he placed her bound body in a fish pond outside their home. James threw the blame for his wife's murder on Charles Hope, an ex-sailor who pleaded guilty to murder when he was accused of having gotten the rattlesnakes for James. Hope was the chief prosecution witness. James has already been convicted of immoral relations with his niece. The chief sensation of the trial came when one of the rattlesnakes in evidence escaped and crawled about the courtroom. Late Friday night the jury convicted James of first degree murder, automatically fixing his punishment at death. [See main news section.]

Sherif Laurence E. Brown of Asheville, N. C., made his deadline by five hours, but then refused to reveal whether he thought W. L. Clevenger, 54 year old college professor and uncle of murdered Helen Clevenger, was the killer he had promised to arrest by 8 o'clock Friday evening. Five minutes after seven, the sherif announced that he had arrested Clevenger at 3 o'clock that afternoon. Clevenger discovered the body of his niece crumpled on the floor of her hotel room ten days ago when he went to awaken her for breakfast. The girl had been shot and hacked with a knife after an apparent rape attempt. The sherif said it might take him a week or ten days to get a confession—he didn't say from whom—but was confident he would "break" the case. Last night Sherif Brown said he had released the girl's uncle, but that Clevenger "chose" to remain in jail. [See main news section.]

Mrs. Mildred Mary Bolton, 46, startled the courtroom of Judge Robert C. O'Connell when she announced she didn't want a new trial because she thought the jury verdict condemning her to death for the murder of her husband, Joseph, was "all right." Since all death sentences must be appealed to the Illinois Supreme court anyway, Judge O'Connell continued her attorney's motion for a new trial until Aug. 3.

Detroit police were startled Thursday when Dayton Dean, Black Legion trigger man, pointed out a swamp near Pinckney, Mich., where, Dean said, the officers could find seven more bodies of Black Legion victims. Dean had been taken to the vicinity of the swamp to reënact the shooting of a colored hodcarrier, murdered because members of the legion "wanted to know what it felt like to shoot a Negro." Dean has already confessed the crime. Five of his alleged accomplices, identified through him, will be brought for a hearing next Tuesday. Officers were debating the advisability of draining the swamp.

The federal bureau of investigation last week named the newest public enemy—Maurice Denning, bank robber. Denning is 28 years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall, blue eyed and brown haired. He is suspected of having led gangs in robberies on five national and three state banks in Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Minnesota.

Will Walker, owner of a hardware store in Golconda, Ill., stayed in his store Sunday night and early Monday hoping to catch the thief who had been taking money from his cash register. Loren Reid, his lawyer, kept vigil with him. Early Monday the two watched a man climb through a window. Walker opened fire, and the burglar returned the fire. Walker was wounded above the heart, but his aim was more deadly. He killed the man, later identified as Joe Salzman.

Mrs. Margaret Karmendi, 24 years old, and Roy T. Lockard, a laborer, face death in the electric chair. They were convicted by a jury at Hollidaysburg, Pa., Monday of the slaying of the woman's 3 year old son, Matthew [Sonny] Karmendi Jr. The death penalty was invoked. The state charged the boy was murdered with a railroad spike, because he interfered with meetings between the accused pair.

Mayor Edward J. Kelly announced encouraging figures on crime Monday. The figures showed that crimes committed in Chicago during the first half of 1936 were 29.7 per cent fewer than in the corresponding period last year, and 42.7 per cent fewer than in the first half year of 1934. There are 22,523 crimes of all classifications in the six month period that ended last June 30 as compared with 31,680 in the first six months of 1935, and 38,829 in the first six months of 1934.

Chicago police all last week kept on the lookout for morons, such as window peepers, child annoyers, and prowlers. A dozen or more were arrested. The drive followed the shooting to death early Monday of William Keane, 28 years old, 5402 Maryland avenue, in the nurses home of the Chicago Lying In hospital, 5737 Drexel avenue. Keane, a paroled convict, was trapped in the home by police. After a spectacular battle, he sought refuge in the room of Mrs. Gertrude Arnold. He was killed there by Detective Frank Rothman. Police believe that Keane was bent on thievery rather than rape. The incident, however, reopened the recent series of rape, murder, and annoyance of women in their living quarters, and prompted the drive against morons.

Additional evidences of police corruption in Minnesota developed during the week as the accusation was made that Thomas A. The accusation was made during the trial of Jack Peifer, St. Paul night club operator, for conspiracy in the kidnaping. Brown took the stand and hotly denied that he had any connection with the crime. Peifer was convicted last night after the jury deliberated 25 hours. He will be sentenced Wednesday. Mrs. Dorothy Sherwood, convicted slayer of her 2 year old son, elected to stake her life against a chance for freedom in Newburgh, N. Y., Monday. Last month she was granted a new trial by the New York Court of Appeals after spending 6 months in the Sing Sing death house awaiting electrocution. Before her first trial she was offered a chance to plead guilty to a first degree manslaughter charge with the resultant prison sentence, but refused. Last Monday, when she was arraigned for a hearing before her second trial the prosecutor indicated that he would agree to Mrs. Sherwood pleading guilty to second degree manslaughter. Mrs. Sherwood insisted on pleading not guilty to the first degree murder charge. A new trial was set for Sept. 14.

A sentence of death in the electric chair was passed upon Peter Chrisoulas, 39 years old, who was convicted by a Criminal court jury on May 13 of murdering Irving Fehlberg, assistant manager of the Midwest theater. Chrisoulas fired the death shot in the theater office while he was being questioned about charges of a 12 year old girl that he had been molesting her in the darkened theater. Before Judge E. I. Frankhauser passed sentence on Chrisoulas, Fehlberg's widow told the judge she would "be happy to see him [Chrisoulas] executed."

Nineteen years ago, Dr. Rendel Harris, while rummaging through an Egyptian rubbish heap, found fragments of papyrus which had been gummed together roughly, and used as wrapping for a mummy case. He took the fragments to the John Hyland library in Manchester, England. There they reposed forgotten until a few months ago. At that time C. H. Roberts, an Oxford expert on papyrus, separated the fragments, and pieced them together so that he would be able to decipher their ancient writing. What he found was announced Sunday.

He found that the fragments of papyrus, pieced together correctly, formed an Old Testament manuscript that was 300 years older than the oldest Biblical fragment previously known to exist. He said the manuscript consists of four fragments of the book of Deuteronomy in Greek, written in the second century B. C.; six fragments of the "Iliad," book one; two pieces of a tragedy; part of an historical work; a piece of verse, and part of an account.

Editors of church journals who support the cause of church people ousted because of radicalism were criticized by Dr. Hugh S. Magill, a Methodist lay leader, and president of the American Federation of Investors. He spoke at a laymen's forum at the Des Plaines camp meeting. Dr. Magill said: "I have no sympathy for radical editors of our church papers who stir things up over an issue which the church, through its board of bishops, the general conference, and the board of education, so patiently, so fairly, and so justly has settled."

JACKPOT.

John Stastny of Joliet had a desire to break a jack pot in a slot machine. When his ammunition of 70 nickels ran out he used a plate on the glass to cascade nickels over the floor of a Joliet saloon. Police advised him to forget about it.

Labor

The union fight between those who favor vertical and those who favor horizontal unions drew near a head during the week. The committee for industrial organization, headed by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers union, and strongly in favor of the vertical union scheme, voted unanimously that they would not stand trial before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor. Leader of the A. F. of L. is President William Green, who is a staunch horizontal union man, and who was instrumental in ordering the CIO men to appear before the A. F. of L. on Aug. 3.

The strength, and weakness, of Green's organization has been the horizontal or craft union. Such a union takes in men of a particular craft, such as electricians, plumbers, or printers. An electrician, whether he works in the building trades, the steel mills, in an electrical supply factory, or anywhere else, is a member of a union just of electricians.

Then, under Green's system, all the craft unions are united under the common leadership of the A. F. of L.

Lewis would organize gigantic vertical, or industrial, union. Under his system he would have everybody in the steel industry, main subject of controversy in the present dispute, belong to one vast Steel Worker's union. In this he would include every worker, whether he be common laborer or craftsman. The A. F. of L. craft union system makes no provision for a worker who is not a craftsman, in that it has never been possible to effect a strong organization of laborers on their own. The United Mine Workers of America, of which Lewis is president, is the most powerful vertical organization at present.

Last week the vertical union men laid plans for intensifying their attempt to install vertical unions in the steel, rubber, automobile, and rayon industries. They also announced that they would attempt to create vertical unions in the steel fabricating plants, which employ 400,000 men in addition to the 446,000 in the steel mills, and in the 46,000 men of the aluminum industry.

Meanwhile strikes raged across the country as workers in all sorts of factories, from candy shops to cotton mills, fought for higher wages and shorter hours. [See main news section.]

GRANVILLE WINS CLASSIC BY 2½ LENGTHS

YANKS BEAT SOX, 5 TO 3; CUBS CRUSH PHILLIES, 17 TO 4

UMPIRE CHASES DYKES, SEWELL; DAVIS COASTS IN BEHIND 19 HITS

Errors Help Bring About Lyons' Downfall.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

The pacemaking Yankees were just a bit too rough with old Ted Lyons and his White Sox associates yesterday in the opener of the series. They hit the old boy in spots and had the added benefit of errors, thereby sending the south side sensations to defeat in a battle that induced 15,000 adherents to heap wrath on the head of Charles Johnston, who was doing the best he could with the job of plate umpiring. The score was 5 to 3.

Mr. Johnston offended the patrons by unceremoniously bouncing Manager Jim Dykes and Catcher Luke Sewell. The Sox thought he erred and caused a pass in the sixth, an incident that brought on a two run Yankee rally. They took that gracefully but later in the inning they were positive they detected not one but several mistakes. Sewell made harmless gestures while walking out to confer with Lyons. Dykes strolled in to the plate to talk. In about a half minute both had vanished by request.

Police Escort Johnston Out.

Until Johnston loomed as an enemy, real or otherwise, the Sox were well on their way toward the winning end of a tussle against Charley Ruffing's pitching. Lyons went into the sixth with a 2 to 1 edge. He went out of the inning trailing by 3 to 2, the principal damage coming from passes. The last of these went to Selkirk, whom the Sox thought they had struck out. It was this that brought on the firing of Dykes and Sewell and a few minutes later the chasing of Mervyn Shea, who was coaching at first and doing a little talking. And the pass also was the cause of a police squad appearing to escort the annoying Johnston to cover at the end of the struggle.

The two run edge the Yanks owned at the finish wasn't exactly the fault of Lyons. He was responsible only to the extent of a pair of singles with one out in the eighth. However, Rip Radcliff let a grounder escape him and Luke Appling was guilty of a bum toss. The Sox promptly reared up in their half and made the fans forget for the moment there was an umpire named Johnston in the park but their biggest opportunity of the day fell apart as quickly as it took form. They could score only one after filling the bases with none out.

Dykes Crosses Up Yanks.

Lyons' start wasn't what could be termed impressive. Crosetti opened the first inning with a single to center. Rolfe singled to the same spot and Crosetti galloped to third. Di Maggio gave the Sox veteran needed assistance by bouncing to Appling for a double play, Crosetti scoring. A pass to Gehrig came next but Hayes tossed out Dickey. The Sox also started their first session with hits by Radcliff and Rosenthal, but the opportunity got away, mainly because Bonura fanned when a fly ball would have been enough for a run.

A fly ball retired Rosenthal in the third before the Sox got busy with their two run episode. Kreevich walked and stole. Bonura handcuffed Crosetti with a single, Kreevich moving to third. Appling aimed a bounding single to short and Crosetti, after recovering the ball, made a desperate effort to force Bonura at second, Kreevich meanwhile scoring. Crosetti's throw to Lazzeri went wild, Bonura taking third and Appling second. Hayes was purposely passed on the hunch that Dykes might hit a double play ball. Instead Dykes hit a fly to Di Maggio and Bonura scored after the catch. Sewell lofted to Selkirk for the third out.

All is Confusion.

Confusion hit the Yanks in the fourth and ruined what might have Galan, Allen Lead Attack with Homers.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Philadelphia, Pa., July 25.—The Cubs irked, but not starved, by a hit and run famine since they beat the Boston Bees 17 to 1 on June 12, this afternoon resumed their three game lead in the National league pennant race by whaling the Phillies, 17 to 4. While successful during the span between their two 17 run demonstrations, the lads had not tallied in double figures in the entire stretch. In today's emergence ceremonies they made 19 hits, including homers by Augie Galan and Ethan Allen.

Chicago continued to get grand pitching despite relaxation temptations afforded by the slashing orgy. Curt Davis, making his first start in history against the Phillies, didn't allow a hit or walk a man in the first five innings. After he had lost his shutout with one run in the seventh, he eased up a bit and in the ninth a single by Walt Bashore, Chuck Klein's 17th homer, and Dolph Camilli's No. 14 accounted for the remainder of the Philly total. The Phils made six hits in all, and drew only one pass.

The Boys Gang Up.

Manager Grimm's sixth 1936 unveiling of himself as a first baseman also was a glorious event. Charles had expressed some fear that his back misery would keep him from hitting. But he made two rousing hits, one which helped in the Cubs' first scoring splurge and the other driving in two runs. His fielding, of course, was stimulating to the infield, jittery in late weeks.

There were four three hit fellows in the cast. Galan had a double and a single in addition to his homer. Allen had two singles in addition to his homer, which was a full sized smack into the left field bleachers. Gabby Hartnett made a double and two singles as did Frank Demaree. Even Stanley Hack, who has been suffering terribly, made two hits, and got two passes besides. Bill Jurges made a double and a single and twice landed on errors.

Despite symptoms that the protracted hitting slump had vanished in the late innings of the final at Brooklyn Thursday, the first two innings today led Cub partisans to suspect the team might be in for another battle with Walter like the 1 to 0, ten inning wrestle they had with the reformed infielder in Chicago last week. Three infield putouts took care of the Cubs in the first inning. Hartnett opened the second inning with a single, but Demaree hit into a double play and Hack flied to Moore.

Dolph Gets Fancy.

But what a difference in the third. Jurges opened with a single to left and stopped at second on Grimm's single to center. Davis bunted a looper which Camilli could have caught, but he tried to be fancy and dropped the ball intentionally to try for a double or triple play. The ball got away from Dolph and in his panic at having gone awry in his efforts to think, he picked it up and threw into center field. When the master strategy had been unraveled, the Cubs had the bases full. Galan then doubled to left, scoring Jurges and Grimm and sending Davis to third. Allen then singled to left, scoring Davis and Galan. Herman fanned and Hartnett lined to Sulik.

Singles to Demaree and Hack and a double by Jurges, as the fourth got rolling, proved enough for Walter and he was replaced by Johnson. Grimm and Davis fanned, but Galan singled, then was caught trying to steal second. Three runs were netted in this four hit foray.

The Cubs came back in the fifth and made four runs on two hits. The two hits, both singles, were made by those two fine old gentlemen, Hartnett and Grimm, the latter scoring two runs. Walks to Herman and Hack and a two base throwing error on Jurges were involved in the cluster.

Galan Busts One.

Galan led off the sixth with a homer over the right field fence. Allen singled and went to third on Herman's single. Bill was out trying to stretch his effort to a double. Hartnett was called out on strikes, but Demaree singled to left, scoring Allen. Hack walked and Jurges lined to Camilli.

All the time the Cubs were making a dozen runs, the Phillies hadn't got a hit or a walk and the only gent who had got on base was Klein, who reached second with two out in the first inning when Galan dropped his fly.

In the sixth, Whitney batted for Gomez and singled off the score board in right center. It wouldn't have been a hit in any other major league park. The inning ended

KEEPING UP A FAMILY CUSTOM AT ARLINGTON PARK

Granville crossing the finish line yesterday afternoon to win the Classic stakes and the three year old championship just as his sire, Gallant Fox, did six years ago. Mr. Bones is coming home second (near the rail) and Hollyrood is finishing third. Twenty-five thousand spectators gathered at Arlington Park for the most important event of the meeting. The winner was the favorite, paying $5.20 to win. His time for the mile and a quarter was 2:03 1-5. The field included every first class three year old in training.

Tribune Swim Finals Today; 168 Compete

BY WILFRID SMITH.

One hundred sixty-eight boys and girls, winners of gold qualifying medals in three sections of the city, will compete this afternoon in the championships of the seventh annual 100 yard swimming races sponsored by THE TRIBUNE. All contestants must report at the Lincoln park lagoon at 1 o'clock today to receive their racing numbers. The first race will start promptly at 2 o'clock.

These 168 contestants already have won gold medals. Hundreds of boys and girls have received merit buttons for demonstrating their ability to swim 100 yards. More than 500 of these were awarded yesterday at the Lincoln park lagoon where the third sectional meet was held.

Twenty Gold Medals.

Today the solid gold championship medals are the prizes for ten boys and girls, the champions of 1936. Those who finish second in today's finals will receive silver medals, while all finishing third will receive bronze medals. Two team trophies also will be awarded. One silver cup will be given to the team of boys which scores the most points in the finals. The other trophy is for the winning team of girls.

The Lincoln park lagoon course has ten lanes. All of the girls' championship races can be decided without semi-finals with the possible exception of class C, in which 13 girls have qualified for the championship. Semi-finals must be held in all five of the boys' events. In class B for boys 13 and 14 years of age there are 32 qualifiers, while in class C for boys 15 and 16 years of age there are 35. These two age classes furnished nearly one-fourth of the total entry for the three preliminary sections.

Four states, Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Indiana, will be represented in today's championships. Twenty per cent of the finalists live outside Chicago.

12 Year Old Qualifies.

The Whiting, Ind., Community service has the largest out of town entry, while the Lake Shore Athletic club girls' team tops the teams in Chicago.

Other teams in the finals are Kenosha, Wis., Y. M. C. A.; Elgin, Ill., Y. M. C. A.; Calumet Memorial park district of Burnham, Ill.; Peoria, Ill., Country club; Jewish Peoples institute; Long Beach, Ind., Country club; Bloomington, Ill., Spring Lake club; Lincoln Turn-Verein, Bilfuss Natatorium, South Side Boys club of Chicago, Jackson Natatorium, St. Francis

APPLING TAKES LEAD IN BIG SIX WITH .379 MARK

A reshuffling of the American league trio in baseball's batting Big Six yesterday saw Luke Appling of the Chicago White Sox take over the lead, and the Sox and Indians holding down all three places. Appling hit safely once in two times up to boost his mark to .379 and break a deadlock with his Sox teammate, Rip Radcliff. Radcliff got only one hit in five chances to slip to .375, where he was deadlocked by Billy Sullivan, young Cleveland catcher, who batted out four hits in five trips to the plate to pass Lou Gehrig of the Yankees.

Three Gophers Likely to Start All-Star Game

BY ARCH WARD.

The only All-American football team that leap from news print to the gridiron is about completed. The national poll, conducted by 182 newspapers to determine the personnel of the college squad that will meet the Detroit Lions at Soldiers' field, Sept. 1, ended last night, but it will be another forty-eight hours before tabulators can finish the job of counting the avalanche of last minute votes.

The eleven players, one at each position, who receive the greatest number of votes will start the game. This will be the first time fans have had complete command of a sports event. They pick the players, the coaches, and then tell the staf of instructors which players they must use as a starting lineup.

Barring unexpected changes in the leaders when the final tabulations are printed, the coaches can have no complaint about their material. Players of national reputations have survived the balloting.

The leading eleven this morning come from Notre Dame, Minnesota, Stanford, Northwestern, Ohio State, Alabama and Chicago. Minnesota, whose candidates never have participated in a losing college game, appears to have qualified three for the starting lineup, Stanford and Notre Dame two each, and Northwestern, Ohio State, Chicago and Alabama one apiece.

It'll Be Big Squad.

This group, presuming it holds its leadership, will be supported by at least 40 players. It is likely that the squad will number 52 or 53 when it reports at Northwestern university for first practice, Aug. 13.

The total vote this morning is 2,374,673. At least a half a million more will be added when all returns have been counted.

Fans now are invited to send in their choices for coaches. You are permitted to name three in the order of your preference. First place counts three points, second two, and third one. Total points will determine the winner. The coaches' poll will end at midnight, Aug. 8. Four coaches will be elected to the staf, but the one receiving the greatest number of votes will be in charge.

MR. BONES 2D, HOLLYROOD 3D IN $35,000 RACE

25,000 See Stake at Arlington.

BY FRENCH LANE.

A great champion—Granville is his name—came out of the eighth running of the Classic stakes at Arlington Park yesterday.

While 25,000 spectators looked on, this gallant colt, the only one of the spring candidates who weathered the whole season, strode from behind, beat his greatest rival, Mr. Bones, by two lengths and a half, and became the second son of Gallant Fox, himself a Classic winner, to turn the difficult trick.

Gallant Fox won the Classic and the 3 year old championship in 1930. His first son, Omaha, won the Classic and championship last year, just as Granville did yesterday.

Gallant Fox, Omaha, and Granville all raced in the silks of William Woodward, New York banker, who owns the famous Belair stud in Maryland.

Battle Plan Works Out.

A strategic plan of battle, carefully carried out by Mr. Woodward's two jockies, Jimmy Stout on Granville and Lester Balaski on the other Woodward color bearer, an English bred colt named Isolator, made the victory just so much easier for Granville.

Fleet Mr. Bones from the John Hay Whitney stable of New York had a terrific assignment. First he had to fight it out with Isolator for half of the journey. When Isolator tired Jock Stout on Granville, who was in third place under wraps, took over the job—and what a thorough piece of work he did!

Granville apparently became incensed watching Mr. Bones conquer Isolator. He came with a rush in rescue of his stablemate.

Turning out of the bend into the stretch he was right up there running eye and eye with Mr. Bones. Jocky Stout, the kid who fell off Granville in the Kentucky Derby, gave the colt its head. He didn't have to go to the whip. Granville by this time was running like his daddy, Gallant Fox, had run in 1930 and like Omaha did a year ago.

Mr. Bones Hangs On.

But Mr. Bones wasn't beaten without an argument. For a half furlong he refused to yield to the big, gigantic striding bay. But finally Mr. Bones, like any horse with two guys to fight, had to surrender under the scorching pace Granville was making.

Mr. Bones faltered. When he did, Granville bounded past him. A furlong from home he was leading by a length. On he charged. Mr. Bones had nothing left after that early six furlong brush with Isolator. He willed badly, but had enough left to save second money. Hollyrood, in the thick of the fight most of the way, finished third, a length and a quarter behind Mr. Bones. Warren Wright's Count Morse charged up from far back and finished fourth.

Granville ran the mile and a quarter in 2:03 1-5. It was two seconds slower than Omaha's time a year ago. Gallant Fox, the daddy of these two stalwarts, ran it in much slower time, although he was forced to engage in a nose and nose battle with Gallant Knight all the way down the stretch.

He's a Real Champ.

The first quarter yesterday was reeled off in :23 3-4 with Isolator on top and the half was run in :47. They were at the three-quarters in 1:11 2-5 and at that stage Mr. Bones jumped into the lead. Granville was head and head with him at the mile, which was run in 1:37 1-5. Then Granville proceeded to display just as much speed down the stretch as Isolater had in the first quarter.

Every top notch 3 year old in active training in America was in the field with Granville and surely his victories in the Belmont stakes in New York and in the Classic at Arlington are more important than the tri-

HOMER CLARK WINS 2D MATCH IN TRAPSHOOT

Alton Gunner Breaks 99 of 100 Targets.

Homer Clark Jr., Alton, Ill., who won the central zone preliminary trapshooting championship at the Lincoln Park Gun club Friday, came back yesterday with his second major triumph when he broke 99 of a possible 100 targets to the La Salle hundred championship.

Dr. H. E. L. Timm, Chicago gunner, took the runner up trophy when he turned in 98 in 100, while Joe Hiestand, Hillsboro, O., national clay target champion, scored 97 to take class A honors.

Walter Wojceihoski, Chicago, broke 97 of 100 to lead the class B shooters. The class C title went to E. K. Scheik, Chicago, when he turned in 94 of 100, and 24 of 25 in the shootoff to defeat George McDermott, Waukegan.

The class D crown was won by N. J. Huck, mayor of Kansasville, Wis., who broke 90 of 100.

Homer Clark Sr., Alton, took the professional championship with 95 in 100.

Joe Hiestand, the world doubles champion, scored an easy victory in the central zone doubles competition when he broke 96 of 100. Mark Arie, Champaign, Ill., 1934 national doubles champion, finished with 92 in 100 to tie Ned Lilly, Staunton, Mich., for class A honors. Dr. E. J. Davis, East Chicago, Ind., broke 85 in 100 in the main card and 17 in 24 in the shootoff to defeat Eddie Newburg, La Crosse, Wis., in class B.

Parker Beats Riggs to Win Tennis Title

Brookline, Mass., July 25.—(AP)—California's tennis crusade through the east met another setback today when Frankie Parker of Lawrenceville, N. J., turned back 18 year old Robert Riggs of Los Angeles, and won the 44th Longwood Bowl tournament.

A crowd of nearly 2,000, the largest in four years, looked on as Parker, abandoning his usual defensive tactics and turned to an aggressive net game, repulsed the Californian, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3, 7-5.

Parker Has Clear Advantage.

Riggs previously had beaten Parker for the national clay court title at Chicago, but lost to him at Spring Lake, N. J., today, in their first meeting on a turf court. Parker clearly was the better, and thus added his name to a list of Longwood Bowl winners that includes Bill Tilden, Bill Johnston, R. Norris Williams, Ellsworth Vines, John Doeg, and Wilmer Allison.

The day was not a total loss for the Pacific coast forces, however, for Alice Marble of San Francisco came through with a 6-1, 8-6 triumph over Carolyn Roberts of New Rochelle, N. Y., in the final of the women's singles.

Alice's Comeback Is Success.

Miss Marble, essaying a comeback after two years' absence from tournament campaigning, hit too hard for Miss Roberts. The latter was able to salvage only the second game of the first set, but she took the aggressive starting the next and ran up a 3-0 lead.

The coast star, however, continued to peck away at this lead and, although her shots lost some of their zip, finally won the set at 8-6.

In the men's doubles, Henry Culley and Joe Hunt, both Californians, defeated Riggs and Wayne Sabin, also Californians, 11-9, 13-11, 7-5, to win the championship.

In the women's doubles, Miss Marble and Miss Gracyn Wheeler, also Californians, defeated Mrs. Virginia Rice Johnson of Chestnut Hill, and Miss Kay Winthrop of Ipswich, 7-5, 3-6, 6-3.

Do Sore Gums Keep Muskies from Hitting?

BY BOB BECKER.

Is the crappie the same as the calico bass? Do muskies shed their teeth, get sore gums, and therefore do not hit lures?

These are just two of the many intriguing questions that fishermen keep tossing back and forth as they unlimber their tackle on countless rivers and lakes at this season of the year.

The crappie versus calico bass argument doubtless will go on forever, because the two species are quite similar and also because of the variation in local names for these popular fish.

Two Kinds of Crappies.

If a fisherman wants to be able to know which is which, here is the dope. We have two kinds of crappies. One is a dark, rich colored specimen with iridescent highlights over the fish. The other is a much paler species with a silvery olive tint. The first one, the one with the gorgeous coloring [the dark green and black spots] usually is called the calico bass, black crappie, or strawberry bass. The second one that is paler in color generally is called the white crappie.

But here is the way you may always distinguish between the two. It's a method that will enable you to pick either species and call it by its right name. The dark crappie with the green and black coloration has seven spines in his dorsal fin. Just count 'em the next time you catch one. The first spine is very short. Then the other six spines are each slightly longer than the other.

Six Spines for This Fellow.

The other crappie [the light colored one] has only SIX spines. So, irrespective of colors on these popular species, you always can tell the difference by counting the spines in the fins on their backs.

Fishermen will find excellent illustrations of these two crappies in THE TRIBUNE'S "Fisherman's Guide," the handy little manual on fish, tackle, fishing methods, and other angling lore. The illustrations show the dorsal fins of both crappies very plainly. [The "guide" may be purchased from the Public Service bureau of THE TRIBUNE, 1 South Dearborn street, Chicago. The price is 30 cents by mail.]

Pike Are Lucky.

Michigan scientists have debunked the old idea that muskies won't strike "because they are losing teeth and their gums are sore." After months of investigation of fish [including many specimens taken in midsummer, when some fishermen believe pike suffer from sore gums] the scientists found that rarely does a big pike have more than three-fourths of his teeth at any one time. The reason: he sheds teeth in the lower jaw throughout the whole year! But he always has enough to handle his food.

Moreover, the scientists could find no basis for the "sore gum" theory. They examined the gums of a number of pike taken in August when the more or less popular belief is that great northern pike and muskies are supposed to have swollen or inflamed gums.

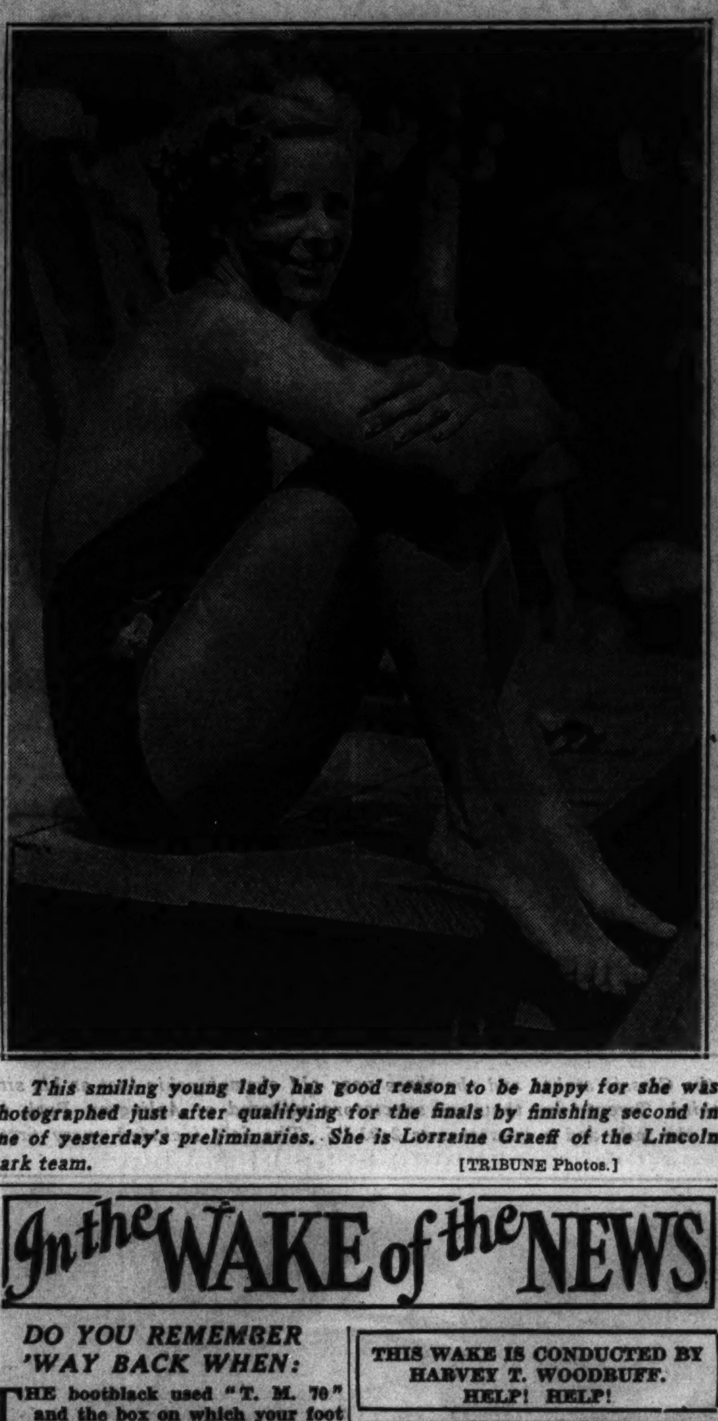
Star Yachts to Race This Week for Herrmann Cup

The Sheridan Shore Yacht club will stage its third annual race series for International Star class boats beginning today and continuing with daily races through the week. Fifty entrants, the largest class of Star boats ever racing together, will compete for the cup offered by U. J. Herrmann.

GEORGE A. CORRY.

The course covering 10 nautical miles will be laid off from Wilmette harbor, location of the club. The racing will start at 3:15 p. m. today and on week days at 4 p. m. Commodore George A. Corry, of the Manhasset Bay Yacht club, Port Washington, N. Y., will be in charge of the racing. He is known as the father of the Star class.

Four Chicago yacht clubs will be represented in the week's racing. In addition there will be boats from Peoria, Two Rivers, Wis., and St. Joseph, Mich.



This smiling young lady has good reason to be happy for she was photographed just after qualifying for the finals by finishing second in one of yesterday's preliminaries. She is Lorraine Graeff of the Lincoln Park team.

Grandmother in the late '70's just before July 4 recited this parody on "The Boy Stood on the Burning Deck":

The boy stood on the back yard fence
Whence all but him had fled,
The flames that lit his father's barn
Showed just above the shed.
A bunch of crackers to the tail
Of one small dog he'd tied;
The dog in anguish sought the barn
And mid its ruins died.
The sparks flew wil[illegible] red and hot,
They lit upon that [illegible]

Jacobs, Garden Agree to Put on Title Bout

New York, July 25.—(AP)—Indications tonight were that the 20th Century Sporting club and Madison Square Garden would jointly promote a Braddock-Schmeling heavyweight championship bout in September.

Numerous conferences have been held in the last two days between Mike Jacobs, head of the 20th Century, and directors of the Garden and it is reported the two organizations have agreed to stage the bout on a 50-50 split of the profits after the overhead.

The one remaining hitch is whether the fight is to be in the Yankee Stadium or in the Garden's Long Island bowl. The odds favor the bowl.

Joe Jacobs, manager of Schmeling, received a cable from the fighter today agreeing to fight Braddock at any place agreeable to the champion. Since the Garden had Braddock under contract it appears to have a slight advantage in the selection of the site.

The site question developed when Joe Gould, manager of Braddock insisted upon the stadium.

"The bowl is a jinx," Gould said. "No champion has ever won in it and besides it doesn't hold enough people."

The bowl holds 77,500; the stadium, 85,000.

Dick Strauss at No. 1, Capt. Maxwell Corpening, high scorer of the season, at No. 2; Jim Hannah at No. 3, and Harry Owen Jr. at No. 4. Owen has recovered from a bad spill.

KAYE DON WINS GOLD CUP RACE FOR SPEEDBOATS

Briton Drives Detroit Craft 45 Miles an Hour.

Bolton Landing, N. Y., July 25.—(AP)—Kaye Don, visiting British automobile and speedboat pilot, today became the first foreigner to drive a winning boat in the 33 year old Gold cup regatta, America's premier motor boat classic.

Pounding over Lake George waters with ease and without competition after the first half mile, the stocky Briton piloted the 11 year old Impshi, Detroit Yacht club entry, over the 90 miles in one hour and 58.13 minutes at an average speed of 45.734 miles per hour.

Alone in the Field.

Alone in the field after the other eight entries withdrew, Don made no attempt to set any records and won as he pleased to return the cup to Detroit after a lapse of three years.

Impshi is owned by Horace C. Dodge, whose Delphine IV. won in 1932.

The Briton sent Impshi around the first 30 mile heat at a 46.392 mile per hour clip, lowered the speed to an average 43.689 miles per hour in the second heat, and then chalked up his best speed in the third and final heat with 47.12 miles per hour.

His best lap for the day was 50 miles per hour in the first heat, as against the record fastest lap speed of 63.644. The fastest speed for the 90 miles was 60.277 established by Delphine IV. at Detroit in 1930.

Joy Ride, Says Don.

"It was just a joy ride," Don commented. With the same power plant as when it began racing back in 1925, Impshi became the only competitor for the ancient silver urn, now insured for $17,000, when eight of the original nine craft were withdrawn.

El Lagarto, the amazing 14 year old boat owned and piloted by George Reis, Bolton Landing and Pasadena, Cal., sportsman, answered the starter's gun for the first of the three 30 mile heats along with Impshi, but burned out a connecting rod before it completed a mile. Thus ended the domination of El Lagarto in the classic which it had won from more modern boats the last three years.

While the gold cup race failed to produce the anticipated competition due to the lifting of hull restrictions, seven tiny 225 cubic inch hydroplanes put on a lively battle for the Gov. Lehman trophy, which was won by Snail II., piloted by Hugh Grinagras of Rockledge, Fla.

Snail II. won both of the 10 mile heats run off between the gold cup competition, with Zippy II., driven by John Shade of Philadelphia, finishing second.

The triumphant craft had a speed of 51.429 miles per hour in the first heat and 50.139 in the second.

England Wins Two Singles in Davis Cup Play

WIMBLEDON, England, July 25.—(AP)—England took a great stride toward her fourth consecutive Davis cup championship today when Fred Perry and H. W. [Bunny] Austin hammered Australia's Jack Crawford and Adrian Quist into defeat in the opening singles matches of the challenge round.

One set each was the consolation the British pair gave the visitors as Austin, playing one of his most brilliant matches, turned back the veteran Crawford, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1, 6-1, and Perry, the world No. 1 ranking player, rallied to defeat Quist, 6-1, 4-6, 7-5, 6-2.

A capacity crowd of 16,000 left Wimbledon feeling Australia has no chance of taking the trophy they last won 17 years ago. The defenders need to win only the doubles Monday, or one of the two remaining singles matches Tuesday.

Austin Overpowers Crawford.

Crawford was no match for Austin after taking the first set behind a blistering service. Starting with the second set, Austin time and again flicked the baseline with brilliant shots despite unfavorable conditions. Gusts of wind frequently swept the court and several times rain stopped play.

When not relying on his baseline drives, Austin went to the net and volleyed effectively. His service could not match Crawford's, however.

In contrast, Perry was forced to fight an uphill battle after winning the first set, which twice was halted by rain. Quist, showing no evidence of the ankle injury which forced him to forfeit his match with Baron Gottfried von Cramm of Germany in the interzone finals, won the second set and held a 5-1 lead in the third before Perry rallied and got his strokes working again.

Perry Puts On Rally.

Peppering Quist's backhand constantly, Perry pulled up to 4-5 when the Australian had set point. The English ace rose to the heights, however, pulled that game out of the fire, went on to win the set, and then breezed to victory.

Quist attributed his crackup to Perry's "petulance."

"I was worried by this," Quist said, citing Perry's frequent appeals to the crowd for silence.

Waldron and Mattson Tie Hagen, Penna at Mohawk

Lou Waldron and Matt Mattson had a best ball of 66 to finish all even with Walter Hagen, veteran professional campaigner, and Tony Penna, Itasca pro, in an 18 hole exhibition at the Mohawk Country club yesterday. Hagen shaved par by six strokes in carding a 67, low individual effort of the afternoon. Mattson had a 69; Waldron a 70, and Penna, 71.

MRS. JARRETT STRIKES BACK AT ACCUSERS

Charges Officials with Unbecoming Conduct.

condemn me because I was unwilling to make a secret of the fact that I like champagne?" she asked.

Brundage Is Unmoved.

Supporting her claim that there were other offenders among the athletes, Mrs. Jarrett charged, "It is well known by all connected with the American team that Brundage [Avery Brundage, president of the American Olympic committee] not only warned me, but specifically referred to members of two teams, namely, field hocky and fencing."

Mrs. Jarrett's statement failed to move Brundage. He refused to answer her charges specifically since Kirby was in Hamburg. He did, however, disclose the shipboard procedure which led to her disbarment.

"It was necessary to convene two special meetings of the American Olympic committee aboard the Manhattan," he said, "to consider Mrs. Jarrett's condition and behavior in public.

"We were severely criticized by passengers and members of the Olympic party for not taking drastic action at once in view of the serious offense. At the second meeting more than an hour was devoted to ascertaining the facts as to reports that Mrs. Jarrett, occupying a room with two young swimmers, could not be aroused by the team physician and the ship doctor.

Decision Is Unanimous.

"There was no difference of opinion among a score of leaders in college athletics and their decision was unanimous.

"This team of nearly 400 athletes was the best behaved squad ever sent abroad and it is most unfortunate that this unpleasant affair should arise to mar an otherwise admirable journey.

"The American Olympic committee will have no further statement to make."

Brundage, nevertheless, was shocked by the swimmer's statement. He was agitated over the discovery that the bar in the athletes' section was open daily. He insisted orders had been given to close the bar soon after first reports of drinking by team members. Such orders were not carried out.

Despite all possible pressure brought to bear by friends, including a petition signed by more than 200 athletes requesting her reinstatement, the Olympic committee did not waver in its stand against Mrs. Jarrett.

There was little chance at any time that the official viewpoint would be changed, but so sharp was the reaction to the swimmer's blast that Brundage suggested tonight it was time for the Amateur Athletic union of the United States, of which he also is the president, to take up the situation and consider asking Mrs. Jarrett to turn in her amateur card.

Eleanor Ponders Future.

Dr. Joseph E. Raycroft of Princeton, vice president of the committee, and Frederick W. Rubien of New York, secretary, informed Mrs. Jarrett the Olympic committee was willing to pay her hotel and living expenses through tomorrow noon, together with her passage home via the S. S. Manhattan leaving Hamburg Wednesday.

Elizabeth Roche, the nurse who has chaperoned Mrs. Jarrett ever since she was expelled from the team late Thursday night, will be relieved of further responsibilities, effective at noon tomorrow. She will be shifted to medical headquarters in the Olympic village.

Mrs. Jarrett, despite her prompt refusal of the offer and her desire to remain through the Olympic games as a spectator, was wavering tonight. Her plans now hinge upon what, if anything, develops from the various offers submitted and advice from home.

Her actor-singer husband, Arthur Jarrett, told her over trans-Atlantic telephone from New York this morning to "fight it out," but she is not so sure now she wants to continue her battle.

Dr. Raycroft discounted Mrs. Jarrett's criticism of the general conduct of the team, but admitted there were some shipboard problems the committee was powerless to anticipate. He answered specially her question as to why, knowing of her past and her admission that she liked a gay life, she was not disbarred from getting on the boat.

"The committee had nothing to do with the status of any athlete beforehand," Dr. Raycroft said. "All we could do was accept certification of the sports governing body, in this case the Amateur Athletic union."

Mrs. Jarrett spent another day answering long distance telephone calls, receiving cablegrams from all parts of the world and weighing offers, which included a proposition to report the Olympic games for an American syndicate and another to take part in a British motion picture.

Goebbels Backs Committee.

She insisted she doesn't want to turn professional, for the time being at least, or otherwise do anything that would jeopardize her amateur standing.

It appears highly doubtful, however, whether she will ever compete as an amateur again, regardless of her course.

The general attitude among American bystanders, while apparently sympathetic, was they had heard enough of the "Jarrett case" and felt the time had arrived to concentrate on Olympic sports. The athletes were too busy getting organized to waste much time on further sympathy for their former teammate.

Nazi Minister of Propaganda Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels' official mouthpiece, Der Angriff, commenting on the Jarrett situation, said:

"She probably didn't believe they could disqualify her, but she thought wrong. It wasn't herself who mattered. It was the others—and discipline. For that no sacrifice is too great no matter how many tears shed."

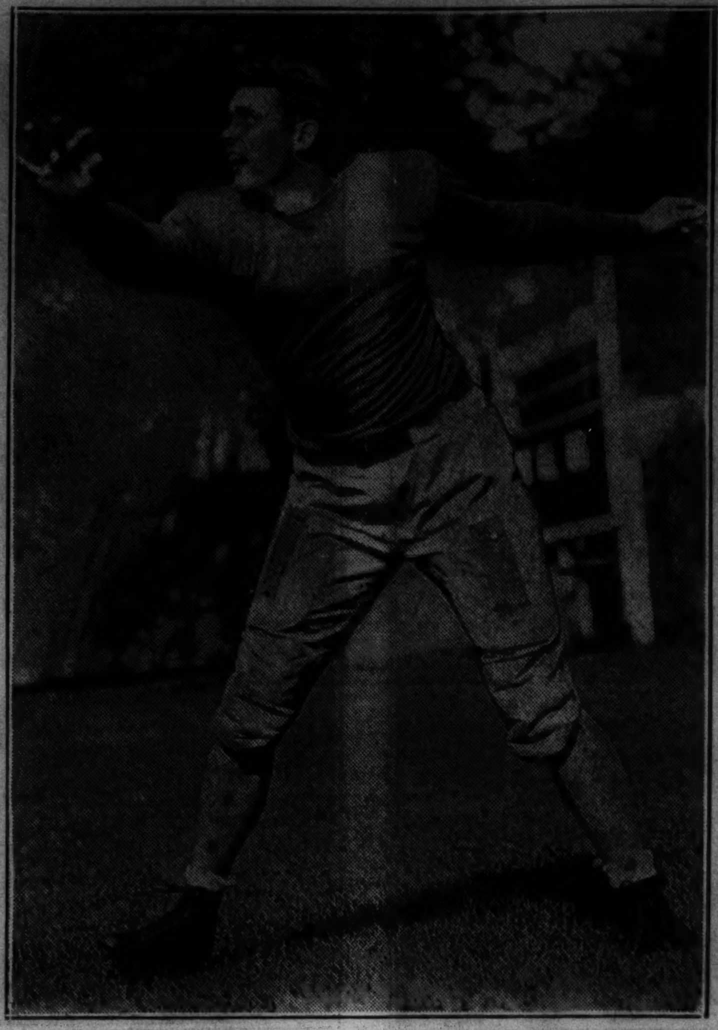
KIRBY IS INDIGNANT

HAMBURG, Germany, July 25.—(AP)—Gustavus T. Kirby, treasurer of the American Olympic committee, today gave indignant denial to Eleanor Holm Jarrett's allegation that the mock marriage and trial staged aboard the S. S. Manhattan en route to Berlin was shocking.

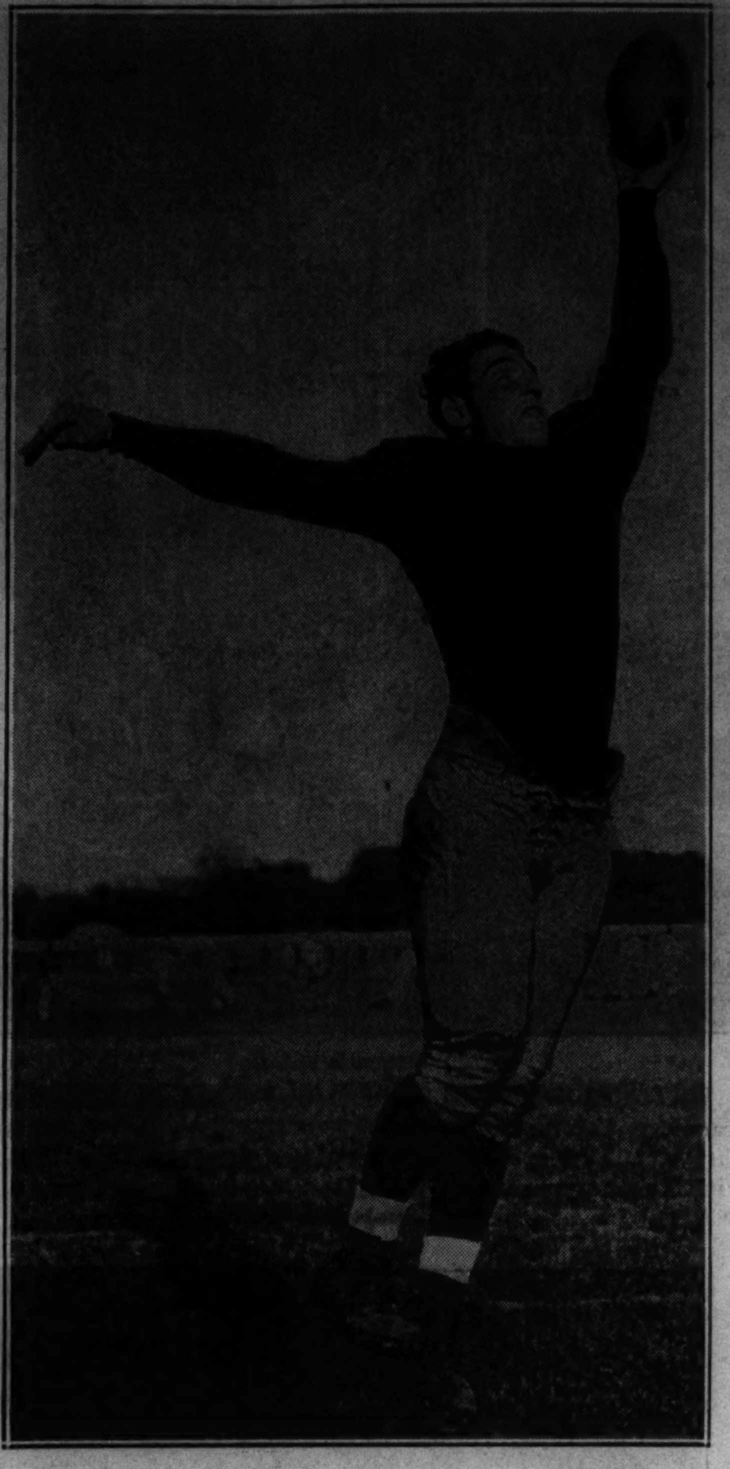
"All I have to say is that only an evil mind could see anything improper in the performance," Kirby said. "There was nothing to offend anybody. I acted the part of the judge and prosecuting attorney; the bride carried a bouquet of vegetables. We were all merry and the whole thing was done in the spirit of fun without anything offensive whatsoever."

Regarding Mrs. Jarrett's suspension, Kirby declared, "I subscribe to it absolutely."

LIONS' ROARS WON'T FRIGHTEN THESE ALL-STARS



George Roscoe, Minnesota's all-around half back, should cause the Detroit Lions plenty of trouble when the College All-Stars take the field against the professional champions. George kicks, runs, passes, and also is a good blocker.



Wayne Millner, Notre Dame's brilliant end, will be relied upon for some effective offensive and defensive work against the Detroit Lions. Millner was a strong factor in the success of Notre Dame last season and is expected to continue that play against the Lions Sept. 1.

Three Gopher Stars Likely Will Start Against Lions

Tower, beginning tomorrow. Orders also will be accepted by mail. The prices are $3.30, $2.20, and $1.10. There are thousands of seats still available in each section.

Eastern fans, voting through the New York Herald Tribune, are making a determined effort to place boys from that section on the squad. It is apparent that none of the boys from the Atlantic seaboard will make the starting lineup. Sarno and Maniaci of Fordham, Michaels of Villanova, Flanagan of Holy Cross, and Irwin of Colgate are sectional favorites in the New York poll. The heaviest vote getter, however, is Bill Shakespeare of Notre Dame. Jay Berwanger of Chicago, who holds the ranking position nationally among the half backs, trails Shakespeare, 4 to 1, in New York, and also is far behind Maniaci of Fordham and Tuffy Leemans of George Washington.

Followers of football in the Missouri valley are putting on a driving finish for Big Six players, especially in Omaha and Kansas City. In the latter city Hayes of Kansas, and Scherer of Nebraska are running far ahead at ends; Sklar and McCall, both of Kansas, are running away with the vote at guards, and Wheeler of Oklahoma is even with Lutz of California at tackle. Phelps of Kansas leads Jones of Ohio State, and Rennebohm of Minnesota, 5 to 1, at center. Shakespeare has a 5 to 1 edge on Berwanger, but he is trailing Peterson of Kansas and LaNoue of Nebraska at half back.

The Portland Oregonian yesterday sent in 41,322 votes for John Oravec, Willamette half back. The Washington Herald reports that the football poll has stirred more excitement in the national capital than Marion Zioncheck. Fans there are asking All-American stars to stand aside and make way for their idea of the country's No. 1 half back—Tuffy Leemans.

Peoria Puts Peters Over.

Peoria, aided by the mayor and other civic leaders, has helped to win Marty Peters, a home town boy, a place on the squad, and plans already are under way to take a trainload of fans to the game. Peters received 11,235 votes in Peoria yesterday. Ed Gryboski, Illinois guard, and Chuck Galbreath, Illinois tackle, also polled a heavy vote there.

Texas papers, especially the Dallas News, are pouring in votes for Dixie players. Wilson, Wetzel, Spain, and Shufford of Southern Methodist; Lester and Lawrence of Texas Christian; McCauley of Rice, and Geny of Vanderbilt are getting a big play. The Iowa City Daily Iowan, with the help of fans throughout Johnson county, mustered nearly 12,000 votes for Dick Crayne, Iowa full back, in the last two days. Crayne is running second to Beise of Minnesota in the national standing.

Tangora Gets Support.

Fans voting through the Philadelphia Record are picking national favorites. Leaders there include Shakespeare and Berwanger at halves; Fromhart and Riley Smith at quarter back; Grayson and Beise at full back; Millner and Moscrip at ends; Dick Smith and Spain at tackles; Michaels and Tangora at guards, and Jones at center.

Returns run much the same in the Newark News poll, except that Weller and Constable of Princeton pull a bigger vote. The Atlanta Journal ballots were marked heavily for southern players, Riley Smith of Alabama setting the pace. The Worcester, Mass., Telegram yesterday reported 3,684 votes for Flanagan, Holy Cross guard.

Nothing Mythical About All-Stars, Dick Hanley Says

[This is the second of a series of articles by Dick Hanley, former Northwestern coach, who helped to direct the first College All-Star team in 1934. Mr. Hanley now classes himself as a La Salle street coach, one of that group which takes delight in second guessing the football coaches in the fall.]

BY DICK HANLEY.

Before the era of THE TRIBUNE'S All-Star game football fans referred to the various all-American selections as mythical teams. The fact that the teams would not and could not play a game together was the reason.

The number of these selections increased almost every year. The liberties taken by some of the so-called experts made them appear ridiculous. In many cases stars were flipped about from position to position regardless of whether or not they might fit into the spots to which they were shifted. Ability to team up with the man alongside him was not considered. Four great running backs, with nary a blocker, sometimes formed the all-star backfield. Or great blockers, and no outstanding ball carrier, were selected.

Among football legends are the stories of individuals who made all-American teams a year or two after they had ceased to play. Still another was that a high school boy made an all-American team.

That's All Changed.

But THE TRIBUNE'S All-Star game, of which the contest between the collegians and the Detroit Lions at Soldiers' field Sept. 1 is the third in the series, has changed all this. The boy who comes through the battle of ballots and makes a place on the squad is entitled to whatever privileges go with being an All-American. He not only must be a vote getter but also he must demonstrate his ability in the training period. Then he will go against real opposition in the Detroit Lions.

In the last two games, however, the more or less unheralded lads have grabbed the starring spots. Reputations meant little. And this is true again this year. In the parlance of the boys who play the game, the stars had better leave their newspaper clippings at home, for their teammates are their most severe critics.

Morale Is Chief Factor.

After coaching in the first game and observing the second I came to the conclusion that morale and spirit in the All-Collegain squad is the most important single ally the coaching staf can have. Collegiate football players are instinctively loyal. Likewise they always are on the lookout for an ideal for which they may battle. If these two important items are capitalized upon by the coaches, the Lions, as versatile as they are, will find their evening of Sept. 1 a real Labor day even if the calendar does not say so.

CHICAGO BROKER WEDS WIDOW OF TEX RICKARD

Mrs. Maxine Rickard Dailey, whose first husband was the late George L. [Tex] Rickard, celebrated prize fight promoter, and Thomas Gill, Chicago broker, were married yesterday morning at Mount Carmel Catholic church. They left on a Canadian trip after a wedding breakfast at the Belmont hotel. Mrs. Edward Stange and Raymond Sullivan attended the couple. Mr. Rickard died in 1929 and Mrs. Dailey's marriage to Frank Dailey of New York three years later was annulled in 1933. Mr. Dailey has since died. Mr. Gill is with Stein, Brennan & Co.

RIVALS FLOCK TO SEE U. S. OLYMPIC TEAM IN DRILL

Pollard Only Casualty in American Camp.

BERLIN, July 25.—(AP)—Most of America's Olympic athletes engaged in their first strenuous workout this morning for the games which open Saturday, but a drizzling rain confined them to their quarters in the afternoon.

All except a few track men were out in the bright morning sun. Other members of the Olympic village looked on eagerly as the feared Americans drilled.

Jesse Owens, Glenn Cunningham, and Jack Torrance attracted the largest audiences. The swimmers, fencers, boxers, divers, and other groups also held their first practice on German soil.

Only a few, including Chuck Hornbostel, former Indiana half miler, waited until afternoon and then found themselves rainbound. However, neither they nor the coaches were worried as plenty of time remains to reach top form.

Pollard Is Injured.

Fritz Pollard, colored hurdling star from the University of North Dakota, was the only ailing member of the team. He is suffering from a pulled leg muscle as a result of shipboard calisthenics. He will be able to take only light exercise for three or four days. He worked out today but was unable to take the hurdles and for the time being his chances of competing in the Olympics seem jeopardized.

None of the athletes would discuss the case of Eleanor Holm Jarrett, disbarred swimming ace, contenting themselve for the most part with a single phrase: "It's too bad."

Bar U. S. Officials.

Avery Brundage and Dr. Joseph E. Raycroft, president and vice president, respectively, of the American Olympic committee, were thwarted in an attempt to crash the gate at the Olympic village for a series of conferences with the coaches this morning.

John Lyman, the former Stanford weight star, now a student at Heidelberg and the American attaché at village headquarters, was out to lunch and his German assistant never had heard of either gentleman. He steadfastly refused to issue a pass to either until Lyman could be reached.

Spaulding Puts Berwanger at Quarter Back

Los Angeles, Cal., July 25.—[Special.]—Bill Spaulding, coach of the University of California at Los Angeles, formerly at Minnesota, admits it is difficult to select a team of All-Stars to meet the Detroit Lions at Soldiers' field, Chicago, Sept. 1. The difficulty, according to Spaulding, is that truly great players must be left off any selection limited to eleven.

Spaulding, however, gave considerable thought to his selections, and finally came up with the following All-Star lineup, which he believes will give the Lions, professional champions of the world, a great battle:

ENDS—Moscrip, Stanford, and Shuler, Army.
TACKLES—Lutz, California, and Dick Smith, Minnesota.
GUARDS—Gryboski, Illinois, and Karcher, Ohio State.
CENTER—Muller, Stanford.
QUARTER BACK—Berwanger, Chicago.
HALF BACKS—Cheshire, U. C. L. A., and Shakespeare, Notre Dame.
FULL BACK—Grayson, Stanford.

Clark Gable, one of the screen's foremost heroes, also took time out to jot down his College All-Star choices. Gable's team follows:

ENDS—Millner, Notre Dame, and Moscrip, Stanford.
TACKLES—Smith, Minnesota, and Spain, Southern Methodist.
GUARDS—Oech Minnesota, and Fortmann, Colgate.
CENTER—Lester, Texas Christian.
QUARTER BACK—Smith, Alabama.
HALF BACKS—Berwanger, Chicago, and Shakespeare, Notre Dame.
FULL BACK—Grayson, Stanford.

Ginger Rogers, dancing star of the movies, is an admiral in the Texas navy and a native of the Lone Star state. Her All-Star team includes ten players from Texas institutions, and one from the Army.

ENDS—Van Zandt, Texas, and Shuler, Army.
TACKLES—Spain, Southern Methodist, and Orr, Southern Methodist.
GUARDS—Groeclose, Texas Christian, and Smart, Texas.
CENTER—Lester, Texas Christian.
QUARTER BACK—McCauley, Rice.
HALF BACKS—Wilson, Southern Methodist, and Wallace, Rice.
FULL BACK—Manton, Texas Christian.

ALMQUIST PICKS TEAM

Davenport, Ia., July 25.—[Special.]—H. V. [Shorty] Almquist, former Minnesota quarter back star, now head coach at Augustana college in Rock Island, named five Gophers in the lineup he submitted as his choice for the college team which will face the Detroit Lions at Chicago on Sept. 1. Almquist named:

ENDS—Millner, Notre Dame, and Moscrip, Stanford.
TACKLES—Smith, Minnesota, and Lutz, California.
GUARDS—Oech, Minnesota, and Karcher, Ohio State.
CENTER—Rennenbohm, Minnesota.
QUARTER BACK—Seidel, Minnesota.
HALF BACKS—Berwanger, Chicago, and Lindberg, Illinois.
FULL BACK—Beise, Minnesota.

KRAUSE'S CHOICES

Ed Krause, co-captain of the 1934 All-Stars and now coach at St. Mary's college, Winona, Minn., thinks the following college All-Star team will be able to defeat or at least tie the powerful Detroit Lions on Sept. 1:

ENDS—Loebs, Purdue, and Millner, Notre Dame.
TACKLES—Smith, Minnesota, and Reynolds, Stanford.
GUARDS—Tangora, Northwestern, and Oech, Minnesota.
CENTER—Rennebohm, Minnesota.
QUARTER BACK—Fromhart, Notre Dame.
HALF BACKS—Berwanger, Chicago, and Shakespeare, Notre Dame.
FULL BACK—Beise, Minnesota.

IT MIGHT BE LUCK if it happened just once—but when any cigar scores 11 straight taste-test victories, it must taste better.

We went among the crowds at the 11 leading sport events of the spring season. Smokers were chosen at random... given two unidentified cigars—a Vintage White Owl and another, representing the leading nationally advertised brands.

The cigars bore no names or familiar bands to prejudice them. Each man smoked both cigars—then indicated the one he liked best. They chose by taste alone... for taste is the only thing that really counts in a cigar. In every case White Owl won by a substantial margin.

Tasting is believing—try a White Owl today. Wherever you are, you can get the same mild, uniform Vintage cigar that won these taste tests. It costs but 5¢ at your nearest cigar store.

ITS RICH, MELLOW TASTE MAKES IT THE FAVORITE!

GAY CROWDS TRY TO PICK WINNER OF CLASSIC RACE

Luncheon Groups Gather in Post and Paddock Club.

BY JUDITH CASS.

The largest and gayest crowd of the season was at Arlington Park yesterday to witness the running of the Classic, one of the season's most interesting races. The grand stands were filled with racing enthusiasts, and the exclusive Post and Paddock club was crowded with a fashionable throng, many from out of town. More than 600 reservations had been made for luncheon, the most that the club has served this season.

Bright skies and a cooling breeze, combined with exciting races in which long shots and favorites shared in the money, provided an entertaining afternoon for betters and spectators alike. Two of the large luncheon parties were given by Mr. and Mrs. A. Watson Armour, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. McCulloch.

Armours Entertain Family.

The Armour party was rather a family affair, and afterward the group moved from the clubhouse out to the stands, where they occupied two boxes. Mrs. Armour's red and white print, with which she wore a sheer straw hat, gave the impression of comfortable coolness. Mrs. Chauncey McCormick and Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr., two of the Armours' guests, wore red also. The straw hat and silk printed frock of Mrs. McCormick was in a bright shade of crimson, while Mrs. Wendell's two piece outfit was of pale pink and rose, and her wide brimmed hat matched the deeper color of the jacket.

Prince and Princess Nicholas Galitheine, Mr. Wendell, and Mrs. W. Irving Osborne Jr. [Elsa Armour] also were in the Armour party. Near them sat Mr. and Mrs. Prentice Porter. Mrs. Porter wore a simple linen frock in a delicious shade of dusty pink, with which she wore a matching cartwheel hat trimmed with a maroon carnation to match the frock's maroon belt.

Woodward Sees His Horse Win.

Mr. and Mrs. McCulloch and their twenty guests scattered to the upper porch and boxes after luncheon, which was served them in a private dining room. William Woodward, owner of Granville, the Classic winner, and his week-end host and hostess, the William H. Mitchells, were among the McCullochs' guests. Also with Mr. and Mrs. McCulloch were the junior Harvey Firestones of Akron, O., Walter G. Dunnington, and Arthur Valentine of New York, the Edward E. Browns, the Britton I. Budds, Harold V. Amberg, and Mr. and Mrs. Lester Norris. Mrs. McCulloch wore a smart frock of tucked white silk and a navy straw hat. Mrs. Norris was in a Persian print.

The Albert Blake Dicks, the Austin Niblacks, Mrs. Curtis Munhon, Mr. and Mrs. J. Andrew King, Gerald Webb Jr., Mrs. Olive Runnells, Mrs. Donald Ryerson, the Howard Linns, the Bryan J. Reids, John C. Mechem, Arthur White of Middleburg, and J. Sanford Otis were among the guests at a luncheon Mr. and Mrs. John E. Hughes gave for Miss Mary Curtis of Boston, who is a house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Linn.

Paul Gardner Watches Race.

The Post and Paddock club's first president, Paul E. Gardner, came west with Mrs. Gardner from their Long Island home to watch the running of the Classic. They were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughan C. Spalding at luncheon yesterday. The Leslie Wheelers also were with the Spaldings. Mrs. Gardner was attractively gowned in a simple white sports dress, with which she wore a white hat, bowler style, trimmed with a black band and veil. Her daughter, Miss Hope Bacon, saw the races with Miss Betty Keith, whose guest she is this week-end. Miss Keith, who is one of the most attractive debutantes of the coming season, wore a girlish tunic dress of pale blue print and an off the face white hat that set off to advantage the handsome tan she has acquired this summer.

Miss Durie Malcolm and Miss Peggy Hixon, debutantes of a couple of seasons ago, depended upon feminine intuition in their choice of horses until young Mr. Webb Jr. joined them to assist in handicapping. Mrs. Robert R. McCormick and her guests, Mrs. Edward Munson and Mrs. Herbert Stone of New York, Mrs. Samuel T. Chase, Mrs. David Adler, and Mrs. William E. Clow Jr. depended upon the help of Mr. Clow and Edward Prendergast in choosing horses.

Get Good Start on Daily Double.

The junior Denis E. Sullivans [Betty Offield], the John W. Brittinghams, the Solomon B. Smiths, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Collins Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Simmons, the junior W. Graham Boyces, the junior Robert J. Grafs and the Morrison Wauds were a few of the young married couples who watched the races from the terrace in front of the Post and Paddock club. Nearly all had hopes of winning the daily double when Crulia and Bright Land ran a dead heat in the first race, for most of them had bet on one or the other of the horses. Mr. and Mrs. Simmons [Dorothy Marshall] were having luncheon in a family party given by her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Marshall. Benjamin Jr., Mrs. Richard Hill Fleming [Betty Marshall], Mr. and Mrs. Edward Brashears, cousins, and Frank O. Watts of St. Louis were with the Marshalls.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Edwin Stanley Jr., were seated in a box with his sisters, Miss Barbara Stanley, whose escort was Gardiner B. Van Ness Jr., and Mrs. Victor Elting Jr., and Mr. Elting. Mrs. Stanley's enormous cerise straw hat was a cheerful note. Another bright note was John D. Hertz's canary colored shirt—he and Mrs. Hertz and their daughter, Mrs. Alfred Ettlinger and Mr. Ettlinger, were seated together. Stanley Field's wide brimmed hat of natural straw trimmed with a green ribbon also attracted attention.

Takes Movies of Races.

A group of young Winnetkans enjoyed the races from a nearby box, Miss Babbs-Ann Burton, Miss Josephine Zeiss and Miss Julie Walcott, all debutantes of the past season, and their escorts, Crilly Butler, Milburn Butler, and Colton Daughaday. A young man with a color movie camera, Edward Taylor, was busily engaged in shooting the horses from the box of Edward F. Wilson, his host. Mr. Taylor, however, did not neglect the three pretty young women who were with himself and Mr. Wilson, Miss Valeria Renaud of Detroit, Miss Margaret Huth, and Miss Maxine Stephens. J. C. Hemphill was the other young man in the group.

Others present were Miss Eleanore Thompson, Bradford Ripley II., Miss Virginia Stewart with James Palmer Johnson; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Mills, Miss Anne Small, in a red print frock; Miss Hope Leonard, Robert Hoag, the junior F. Dorsey Montgomerys and Mrs. Dexter Cummings with the Henry N. Rowleys, Mrs. William P. Hodgkins and Allen Warren with Robert F. Carr, the J. Clarke Deans, who had among their guests Mrs. Howard Johnson and Mrs. George T. Leach, the Otto Lehmanns, the Silas Strawns, and the Stuart Shermans.

THIS EYE WON'T BLINK

Turf fans will be assured of accurate placing of horses in close finishes at the 31 day meeting of Washington Park. The tower shown under construction will contain the "Eye in the Sky," which determines winners of hairline finishes. The camera will be installed in the tower this week, and everything will be ready for the opening Aug. 3. The "Eye in the Sky" will be 116 feet above the track.

Off at once. Good start from gate. Won driving, place same.

CRULIA away fast but slightly forced back when unable to outrun INSCOLT and ALL AGOG, rushed through on the inside soon after reaching the stretch and, holding on well, gained a dead heat but would have been headed in another stride. BRIGHT LAND forced to lose ground and, probably best, gained steadily when under strong riding in the final quarter and deadlocked CRULIA for a dead heat in the final stride. INSCOLT displayed speed from the start, swerved out slightly on the stretch turn and weakened in the final eighth but held others safe.

COME TO TAW on inside throughout and receiving a powerful and daring ride, began to make up ground approaching the stretch, continued stoutly after straightening up in the last three-sixteenths and wore down WHISCENDA in the closing strides. Latter displayed fine speed from the start, was aided by good rating, held on well and but for bearing out in the final eighth, might have won. GENIAL MANNERS, slow to respond to light pressure, came with good speed through the final quarter where she was on the outside.

GOLDEN X., away fast but unable to hold the advantage and repeatedly impeded during the run through the back stretch, was slow to rally when clear but came with fine belated speed in the last quarter and won drawing out. JUSTA SHEIK away slowly and sluggish for almost a half mile, was moving up fast when slightly interfered with entering the stretch, but recovered quickly and closed with determination in a fine effort. APPOMATTOX had speed from the start, was under restraint for three-quarters and quickly opened up a commanding lead when urged but weakened and could not hold the leaders.

SILVERSMITH, away fast but kept under strong restraint for three-eighths during which he raced very wide, continued to lose ground as he took command on the stretch turn and, opening up a big advantage withstood MANSCO'S rush. Latter, probably best and forced to ease as the winner blocked him in an attempt to come to outside on the stretch turn, recovered slowly then came with a rush and was rapidly getting to the winner. COLONEL ED displayed good speed from the start and held on fairly well.

CAPT. GRANVILLE, a contender from the start and under steadying restraint for seven-eighths, readily responded to light urging, came around the leaders gradually, and shaking off MR. BONES, drew out fast. MR. BONES, under pressure the first quarter, was taken in hand after about five-sixteenths, forced a fast pace in determined fashion and taking a short lead on the stretch turn, held on stubbornly to the final eighth before submitting to the winner, then weakened but outstayed HOLLYROOD. Latter, well in hand for seven-eighths, made a game bid but could not get to the leaders.

GRANVILLE WINS $35,000 CLASSIC; MR. BONES IS 2D

Woodward Colt Comes from Behind.

umphs Bold Venture scored by narrow margins in the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness. Bold Venture wound up his campaign early as a cripple. Granville this morning is as sound as a hickory stick and is fit and ready to meet all comers at the very first asking.

A fellow like that must be a champ.

Returns 8 to 5.

Granville was a favorite from the time the betting started. For a while he was at 2 to 1. Later on he was at 9 to 5. More backing developed and he went 8 to 5. He paid off at that figure, returning $5.20 to win, $2.80 to place, and $2.40 to show. Mr. Bones, after mustering great support, paid $3.40 to place, and $2.80 to show. Hollyrood's show price was $3.80.

Seldom has a great stake been decided under more ideal conditions. It was a truly run race. Floradora suffered some interference and had a rough trip, but never showed any real running ability. Count Morse suffered slight interference in the first quarter, but was stoutly restrained and the interference made no difference. Even after finding a clear path, he could not reach the leaders.

Memory Book was raced wide all through the journey, but was not in a class with the leaders. That's about the whole story of the eighth running of the Classic.

The gross value of the race was $35,925. Granville's share was $28,400.

No Family Resemblance.

Granville is a rangy bay colt. He stands 16.2 hands in height and weighs approximately 1,000 pounds. He has a white stripe on his face, and is a big-boned horse. He runs with a long stride as did Gallant Fox and Omaha.

He looks totally unlike Gallant Fox, however. The sire was a "picture horse," a rich bay color, with blazed face and a white ankle. Omaha resembled Gallant Fox more than does Granville. Omaha was a chestnut, with blazed face and two white hind ankles. He was sprinkled with gray. Omaha resembled Granville only when he ran. He had the same long stride.

After the race, William Woodward, in accepting the Classic cup presented by Harvey Woodruff of the TRIBUNE, didn't pay much of a tribute to Granville. His eyes were on Jocky Jimmy Stout.

"So they said you couldn't ride, son," he said to the jocky who had fallen off Granville's back at the start in the Kentucky Derby.

Perfect Weather for Race.

Perfect weather increased the throng by several thousands. Classic day had dawned with a clear and smiling sky, and there was a gentle breeze blowing from Lake Michigan throughout the afternoon. It was a day when the most fashionable sports clothes could be worn with the utmost comfort.

Chicagoans and their thousands of guests took advantage of these delightful conditions. The Post and Paddock club and clubhouse enclosure were the scenes of the gayest parties of the year, some of which assembled for breakfast and remained until after the dinner hour.

The crowd wagered $109,729 on the outcome of the Classic. The total betting for the afternoon was $597,853. The betting by races follows:

First race	$ 45,336	Fifth race	$ 82,120
Second race	$ 52,801	Sixth race	$109,729
Daily double	$ 24,316	Seventh race	$ 71,963
Third race	$ 60,619	Eighth race	$ 76,792
Fourth race	$ 73,177	Total	$579,853

THIS SETTLES IT

Mrs. Jarrett Taken Off Olympic Team; Review of the Week's Sports

America's Olympic team and officials made history Thursday before an athlete had set foot on Germany's shores. With the port of Hamburg in sight and official welcome to the Olympic games awaiting only the team's appearance on the mainland Friday morning, cable wires were humming with the news of an international complication. Eleanor Holm Jarrett, most photographed of America's mermaids, night club entertainer, and wife of Bandmaster Art Jarrett, had been dismissed from the squad. The charges were fondness for cocktails and late hours.

It was the first dismissal from an Olympic squad for an athlete in 12 years and the only time a champion had been dropped. Loss of Mrs. Jarrett, who competed in two previous Olmpic games and who won the 100 meter back stroke title in 1932, was a severe jolt to her swim coach. In addition to eleven accepted national back stroke records from 100 yards to 220 yards, Mrs. Jarrett holds the world record for the 150 yard backstroke.

The dismissal from the squad followed a preliminary warning after a drinking party on shipboard, at which she was escorted by Charles MacArthur, husband of Actress Helen Hayes. Thursday Mrs. Jarrett attended an afternoon party, went to her stateroom and returned on deck later at night, encountering Mrs. Ada T. Sackett, chaperone. The dismissal came quickly.

Tearfully, Eleanor pleaded her case before the Olympic committee as the train bearing athletes from Hamburg to Berlin roared on its way. She gained little except the backing of 220 athletes who petitioned for her return to the squad. Avery Brundage, chairman of the American Olympic committee said, "We had no alternative under the circumstances." Coaches were not so severe. Many felt she had been punished enough.

Her husband, in New York, stated he would be waiting with open arms to greet her on her return. "Eleanor isn't a 10 year old any more. She's been around enough to know how to handle herself. She always seems to be able to win, even if she doesn't go in for the strict training of some of those athletes."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Jarrett secluded herself in a Berlin hotel after promising "never to touch another drop" and to train faithfully if reinstated. Eleanor had dried her tears, awaiting developments.

Yesterday she gave up hope of reinstatement and charged Olympic officials with unbecoming conduct during the voyage.

Cubs Step Away from St. Louis.

Chicago's Cubs and Sox continued to be the chief attractions of major league baseball last week, the Sox for their brilliant hitting, and the Cubs for their dogged fight to keep ahead of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Sunday the White Sox beat the Athletics twice, 11 to 5 and 8 to 2, for their eighth straight. Tuesday they returned to their home park and the Senators snapped their winning streak and pushed the south siders out of fourth place. But the Sox came back Wednesday to subdue the Senators, 3 to 2, in 12 innings. Thursday they repeated their triumph, this time 7 to 6, to make it 17 victories in their last 21 games. The Yankees, however, beat the Sox yesterday.

The Cubs could do no better than split with the Phillies Sunday as the Cardinals took two from Boston. Chicago thus led its second place National league rival by 15 percentage points. But it was a different story Tuesday, as they whipped the Dodgers, 5 to 3, and Carl Hubbell of the Giants set back St. Louis, 2 to 1. That gave the Chicagoans a two game advantage. Wednesday also was profitable, as the Cubs again beat the Dodgers, while the Giants defeated the Cards. That sent Chicago out in front by three games. Thursday the Cubs' margin was cut to two games as the Dodgers won and St. Louis defeated the Giants. Rain canceled Friday's National league games. The Cubs resumed the three game lead yesterday, as they beat the Phils, while the Cards lost. The week's standing of games won and lost:

23 Named for Chicago Stake at Washington

Washington Park's Chicago handicap, $2,500 added inaugural feature that will get the 31 day race meeting under way on Aug. 3, has attracted 23 nominations, it was announced by Walter L. Gregory, president of the Washington Park Jocky club.

Leading stables have named their star sprinters for the Chicago handicap, a six furlong event for 3 year olds and upward. Where Away, winner of the Arlington Inaugural, and Rock X, winner of the Hawthorne Inaugural, are expected to go to the post at Washington Park.

Some Speedy Fellows Here.

Rock X and Where Away, in their battle for a second inaugural victory, will clash with Visigoth, Erin Torch, Microbe, Toro Nancy, Isaiah, Slim Rosie, Infidox, Transfun, Mr. James, Below Zero, Caliban, Sunned, Chief Cherokee, Fast Stride, Danise M., Silent Shot, Blue Train, Kentucky Blues, Silk Mask, Capt. Cal, and Silverette.

Because the early closing of Washington Park's seven stakes was overlooked by trainers of a number of the larger stables, Racing Secretary Charles McLennan has decided to leave three stakes open until Aug. 10 for supplementary nominations. This action was taken at the urgent request of several trainers, who had made plans to campaign their stake horses during the Homewood meeting for a share of the $300,000 in purse money that will be distributed.

The three still open are the $7,500 added Sheridan handicap, to be run Aug. 22; the $5,000 added Great Western handicap, Aug. 29, and the $10,000 added Washington Park handicap on Labor day, final afternoon of the meeting. All are for 3 year olds and upward.

Weights Due Wednesday.

Weights for the Chicago handicap are due Wednesday, and McLennan also is occupied these days accepting stall applications for the meeting. Most leading western stables and many from the east have applied for space, and most available room at the large Homewood plant is about exhausted. The overflow is being assigned to Lincoln Fields, a few miles south.

Among the larger outfits to race throughout the 31 day meeting are: Bomar stable, with 22 stalls reserved; Dixiana, with 30; E. R. Bradley, with 12; Norman Church, 12; Mrs. Emil Denemark, 30; Tranquility Farm stable, 25; Tony Pelleteri, 26; Odessa Farms, 12; Shandon Farm, 19; Three D's Stock Farm, 15; Southland stable, 10; Valdina Stock Farm, 28; J. J. Coughlin, 25; Brownell Combs, 7; Benny Creech, 20; Blue Ridge Farm, 10; H. G. Bedwell, 19; J. E. Hughes, 10; Jack Carter, 20; J. W. Parrish, 6; T. C. Worden, 30; John Marsch, 10; George Ogle, 5; Rosedale stable, 12; Howard Wells, 14; R. T. Watts, 12; E. B. Carpenter, 10; C. E. Davison, 17; Eskay stable, 15; P. L. Kelley, 13; F. P. IT'S JUST AN OLD FAMILY CUSTOM, SAYS GRANVILLE Classic Winner Says He Kept Tradition.

BY HARVEY WOODRUFF.

"Just an old family custom, Pal." It was Granville speaking as this correspondent sought his stall, according to custom, after the Gallant Fox colt had demonstrated supremacy over the opposing field in the eighth annual Classic stakes at Arlington Park. Granville referred, of course, to previous victories of his sire Gallant Fox, and of Omaha, also a son of Gallant Fox.

By the time we walked from clubhouse over to the stables, Granville had cooled out, and was sitting out front in a lounging robe of white with red dots, smoking a long black cigar. On a table nearby was a glass of lemonade. We looked at it inquiringly as we queried, "What, no celebration?"

"Not after what happened to Eleanor Holm Jarrett," replied Granville with a wink, "but if you step inside and open the cupboard, there's a bottle which isn't lemon extract."

Granny Explains Race.

"Well, what about the race, Granny? That's what I'm supposed to ask you," we continued.

"It was very satisfactory from two viewpoints," he replied. "First, I proved that I'm not entirely a hard-luck colt as it seemed early in the season. It also proved that Jocky Jimmy Stout knows how to ride as some openly doubted when I was bumped at Louisville and he was thrown off.

"Here's how it was: I was up there nicely as you saw going by the clubhouse, but I was inside near the rail where I could be pinched off if I didn't get out. You saw what happened to Floradora at that point. Right there is where the race, as it turned out, may have been decided. Jimmy leaned down and whispered 'feel strong enough to go around 'em' and I answered right back 'I'm full of run today.' Then came a small opening and Jimmy weaved through it, and although I was on the outside I was in safe position. When Mr. Bones challenged, Stout took me forward, too, and I finally drew away from him much easier than I did in the Belmont which I believe you saw.

Sorry for Floradora.

"I did feel sorry for Floradora, though. She's a nice gal, but didn't get a chance to get to the outside as I did. They closed in front of her and her jocky had to pull her up until she was ninth on the backstretch with practically no chance to get through. She felt pretty bad, too. You see, I had a date with her to dance at the Edgewater terrace, where Bill Dewey had invited us, but she phoned and canceled it, saying she had a headache. The kid must have a sense of humor, though, for she said it was not an Olympic headache."

"Never mind about your dates, Granville," we remonstrated, "but do you consider yourself better entitled to be called champion than Bold Venture?"

"Now, Harve," replied Granville, "that's pretty personal and of course I'm prejudiced. But I'm still out here running and Bold Venture is in bed with injuries. You don't win championships in bed, do you? Of course, that bumping at the start ended my Kentucky Derby chances. Bold Venture beat me a nose in the Preakness, right at the end.

Was a Camera Finish.

"I never was satisfied with that decision although it was not sportsmanlike so I didn't protest. It was a camera finish. Bold Venture was on the outside which a still camera is likely to favor. I never said anything, but if this 'eye in the sky' had been operating yours truly possibly might have been awarded the verdict in that race too.

"All in all, I'm pretty well satisfied with victories in the Belmont and Classic, and I've carried on the Gallant Fox line for Mr. Woodward."

"What are your plans for the future?" we asked.

"Whatever Owner Woodward and Trainer Fitzsimmons wish. I'd like to go in the Travers and Saratoga cup. I hope they keep me in this country next year as a handicapper rather than send me to England to run for that elusive Ascot cup. Another lemonade before you go? [again that wink] no? Well, I hope to see you this winter either at Hialeah or Santa Anita or out here again next summer."

GIANTS, 5; REDS, 4.

New York, July 25.—(AP)—The Giants pushed over three runs in the last of the ninth today to nose out the Cincinnati Reds, 5 to 4, and hold fourth place in the National league.

The New Yorkers had to come from behind twice, once after Billy Myers' homer in the second had boosted the Reds' edge to 2 to 0 and again after Hallahan's four bagger in the ninth had made it 4 to 2.

Burgess Whitehead's single, scoring two runs, tied the count in the Giants' half of the ninth, after which Hank Leiber's single brought in Whitehead with the winning tally. Score:

Sauer Signs to Play with Green Bay Packers

Green Bay, Wis., July 25.—[Special.]—George Sauer, former Nebraska fullback, today signed to play again this fall with the Green Bay Packers in the National Professional Football league. Sauer joined Green Bay last season. He is six feet, two inches tall and weighs 200 pounds. The Packers now have signed 17 men for 1936.

French, Warneke Will Pitch Today in Double-Header

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

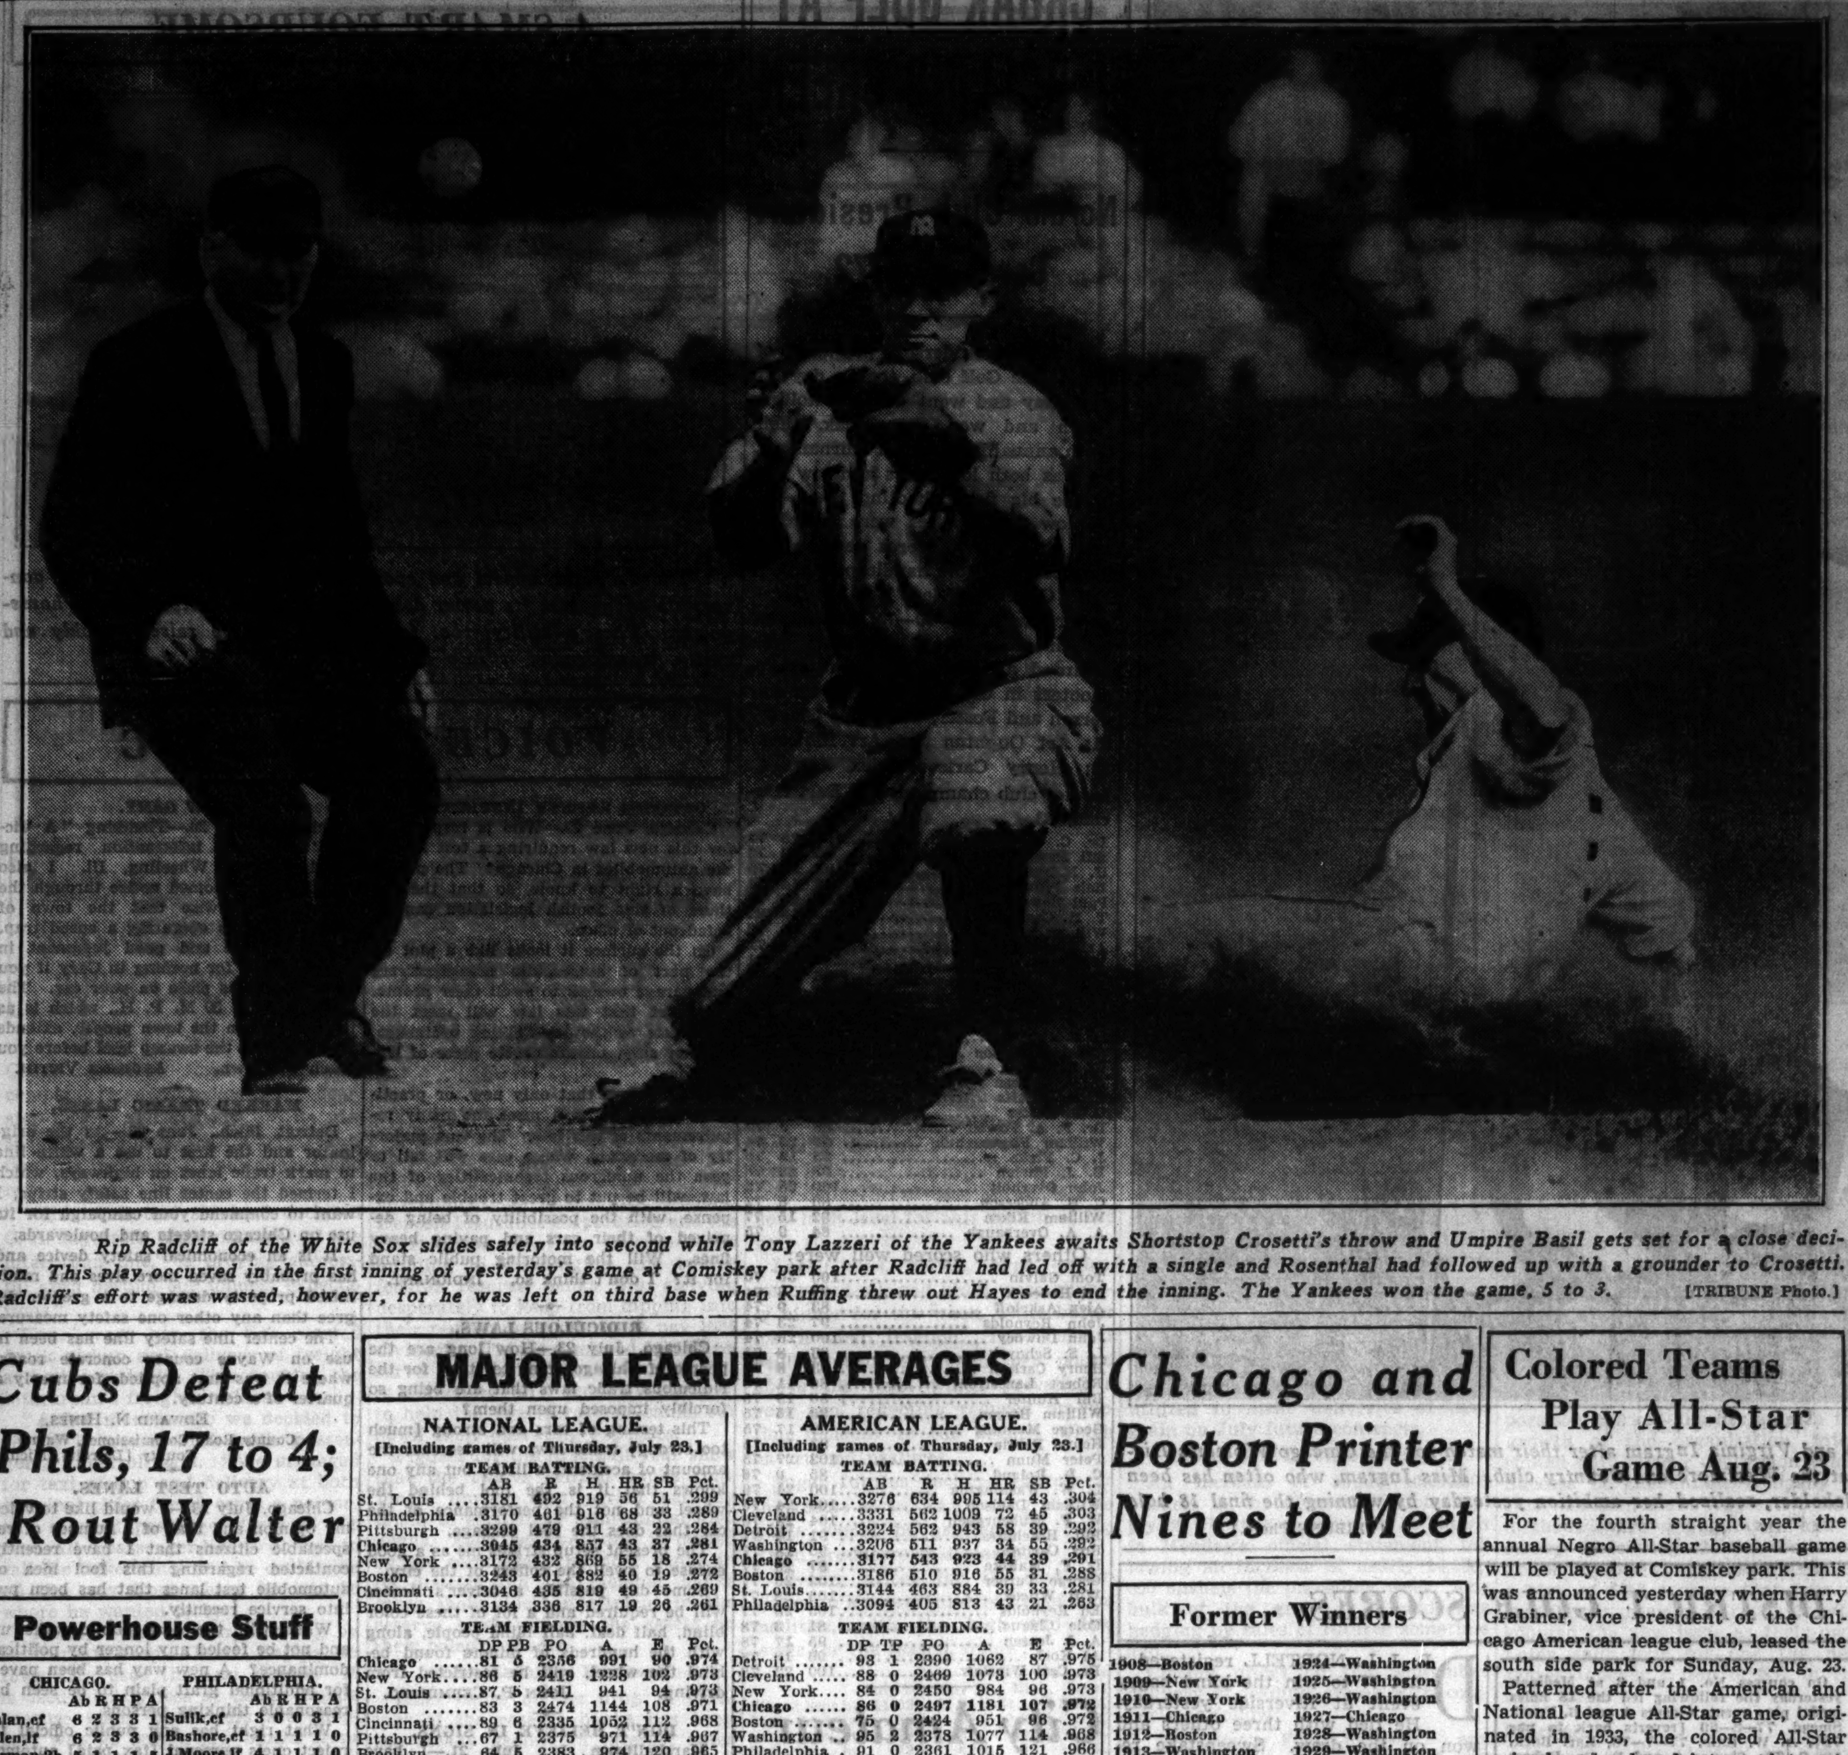
Philadelphia, Pa., July 25.—Larry French and Lon Warneke, each seeking his eleventh victory, will pitch for the Cubs tomorrow. Bowman and Passeau will work for the Phils. Passeau stood the Cubs on their ears last Sunday in the home final.

Augie Galan had a good day, but two of his hits were made after he had been given life on dropped fouls.

The Phillies were charged with five errors and had the scorer not been sympathetic, four more might have been called without stretching any points.

The Cubs now have won three and lost one game on the trip, while the runner-up Cards have reversed the ratio.

YOU'LL HAVE TO HURRY, RIP!



Rip Radcliff of the White Sox slides safely into second while Tony Lazzeri of the Yankees awaits Shortstop Crosetti's throw and Umpire Basil gets set for a close decision. This play occurred in the first inning of yesterday's game at Comiskey park after Radcliff had led off with a single and Rosenthal had followed up with a grounder to Crosetti. Radcliff's effort was wasted, however, for he was left on third base when Ruffing threw out Hayes to end the inning. The Yankees won the game, 5 to 3. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Boston will meet Chicago at Grant park in the opening game of the twenty-sixth annual tournament of the Union Printers' International Baseball league, which will be held Aug. 9 to 15. Other first round pairings will be announced later by William F. Howe, Chicago commissioner. The games will be played at Grant park and Wrigley field.

Thirteen teams from the central west, northwest, east, and Canada will compete in the meet. In addition to Boston and Chicago the teams are Baltimore, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, New York, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Washington, Hamilton, Ont., and the combined St. Paul-Minneapolis squad.

Players Work Out Daily.

Chicago's hopes of winning its fifth championship and the Garry Herrmann trophy depend on a well balanced team which recently began clicking after a slow start. Manager Frank [Lefty] De Caluwe has ordered the players to report for daily workouts this week for the game against Boston.

Washington, however, is the favorite to retain the title. The printers from the capital have captured the title twelve times. The team won its first championship in 1913. The Senators then triumphed in 1922 and continued to blaze their way to the title each season until 1927, when Chicago won the Herrmann trophy at Cincinnati.

Washington Keeps Winning.

Washington took the title again in 1931 and 1932. Detroit walked off with the 1933 championship, but Washington again produced a brilliant team to win the 1934 and 1935 tournaments. Last year's meet was held in Cleveland, O.

According to Commissioner Howe, more than 2,000 delegates will visit Chicago for the tournament. An entertainment committee has been chosen, and arrangements will be made to take the visitors on tours of radio studios, the stockyards, and the Brookfield zoo. In addition a dance will be held in the grand ballroom of the Stevens hotel Aug. 9.

Colored Teams Play All-Star Game Aug. 23

For the fourth straight year the annual Negro All-Star baseball game will be played at Comiskey park. This was announced yesterday when Harry Grabiner, vice president of the Chicago American league club, leased the south side park for Sunday, Aug. 23.

Patterned after the American and National league All-Star game, originated in 1933, the colored All-Star series has developed into an interesting struggle. In the first game the west scored a 7 to 4 victory. The second game in 1934 resulted in a 1 to 0 victory for the east and last summer the west battled 11 innings to gain the edge with a 11 to 8 triumph.

With colored newspapers of the country again coöperating, a national poll will determine the makeup of the east and west teams. The west's team will be chosen from the Cincinnati Tigers, St. Louis Stars, Chicago American Giants, and Kansas City Monarchs.

The east will be represented by players from Pittsburgh, Newark, Washington, and Philadelphia colored teams.

Balloting will begin on Aug. 1 and close on Aug. 15. Managers of both squads also will be selected in a national vote.

Duffy Florals to Face Mills in 2 Games Today

Games Today

Havana, Cuba, vs. Spencer Coals at Spencer field, 1:30 p. m. [2].
Duffy Florals vs. Mills at Mills' stadium, 1:30 p. m. [2].
Chicago Firemen vs. Arlington Heights at Arlington Heights, 3 p. m.

The Mills will seek revenge for two early season defeats at the hands of the Duffy Florals when the teams clash this afternoon in a double-header at Mills stadium, Kilpatrick avenue and Lake street. The first game will start at 1:30 o'clock.

Phil Collins of the Mills is expected to face his old teammate of the Philadelphia Phillies, Snipe Hansen, in one of today's contests. Jim [Hippo] Vaughn, one of the best southpaws in the history of the Cubs, will go after his eleventh straight victory when he meets Dutch Kohlenberg of the Florals in the other game.

A team of Cubans from Havana will invade Spencer Coal field this afternoon for another important semi-pro double-header. The Havana team will start Gustavo Lluberres against the Coals, and the latter may expect considerable trouble. Lluberres held the Cincinnati Reds to four hits in ten innings in a game on the island last spring. Rudolp Fernandez, who defeated the St. Louis Cardinals this year in another spring game, also will see service. The Coals will use Clarence Cleary and Pete Beam.

The Chicago Firemen will invade Arlington Heights for a single game with the home club in another semi-pro meeting on the day's schedule. Prior to the game a parade will be held to honor the visiting firemen. Doug McWeeny, former Brooklyn Dodger pitcher, will work against Arlington Heights.

Shuffleboard Championship Is Won by Charles Edwards

Traverse City, Mich., July 25.—[U. P.]—Charles Edwards of Berwyn, Ill., captured the national shuffleboard championship last night when he defeated Richard Baldwin of Palmyra, former Michigan State champion, 104-65, 81-100 and 103-81.

been a scoring incident or at least a serious threat. Gehrig led off with a fly close to the left field and there was nobody in the vicinity so it dropped safely for a double. Gehrig wasn't on the bases for long. Dickey grounded to short and Appling threw to Dykes to head off Gehrig at third. Lou charged back to second and was nailed. Meanwhile Dickey was on his way there and he too was nailed. Selkirk then fanned.

The somewhat riotous sixth, which returned the Yanks to the lead, got under way with a pass to Crosetti. The fourth ball in this incident brought the attention of the Sox to the fact that Ump Johnston might have forgotten to bring along his specs. The Sox were pretty mad about it but didn't say much. Rolfe followed with a single to left and Di Maggio singled to center. Crosetti scored on the latter hit, Rolfe took third, and Di Maggio went to second on the throw in. Gehrig was purposely passed, filling the bases with none out.

Sewell, Dykes Depart.

Lyons climbed partly out of the hole when Dickey fouled to Sewell. Difficulties arose immediately, however. What looked good enough to be a third strike for Selkirk was ruled a third ball by Ump Johnston.

Without even dignifying the man in blue with an icy stare Sewell walked out to appease Lyons, meanwhile raising his arms in the air. Johnston made motions indicating that he wanted Sewell to leave the party. Dykes trotted in to find out what Sewell had done to warant expulsion. Being the manager, Dykes thought he was entitled to information, but all he heard from the arrogant gentleman in blue was, "Ask the American league office."

Then Dykes talked fast, although quietly, and was told that he, too, could leave, but he was satisfied about one thing. He learned that Johnston's hearing was perfect. After the storm had subsided, Selkirk walked and Rolfe was forced to score, giving the Yankees a 3 to 2 lead. The inning ended with Lyons fanning Hoag and Lazzeri.

Lyons and his fellow workers remained tough until after Gehrig had been thrown out to start the eighth. Jorgens, who took over the catching when Dickey surrendered to the effects of a foul tip on his bare hand, singled to left. Selkirk also singled to left and Radcliff permitted the ball to roll to the stand. Jorgens scored and Selkirk went to second on the error. A pass put Hoag on first. Lazzeri grounded to Hayes who passed the ball to Appling, forcing Hoag at second. Appling relayed to Bonura, but the throw went wild and Selkirk counted.

The Sox half of the eighth started off with such promise that the bases were loaded with none out. Appling walked, Hayes singled, a wild pitch advanced them and Piet walked. Grube caused some anguish by watching three strikes curve across. Haas swung for Lyons and forced Piet at second, Appling scoring. Kennedy went to first to run for the lame Haas. Radcliff's pop to Lazzeri rounded out the inning. The Sox fell in order in the ninth.

CAIN, WHITEHEAD TODAY

Merritt [Sugar] Cain and John Whitehead will be Manager Jim Dykes' pitching nominees for today's double-header with the Yankees. Johnny Broaca will be one of Joe McCarthy's starters, and the latter hopes to locate another in time to go through with the program. The first game will start at 1:30 p. m.

The White Sox yesterday placed Pitcher Raymond Babe Phelps on the voluntarily retired list, which means he is out for the season. The Babe has been bothered by throat trouble. Another reason for the move was that the roster had to be shaved by one man to make room for the return of Outfielder Dixie Walker.

Before the game a South Chicago delegation, headed by Judge Thomas A. Green, stepped to the plate and presented their neighbor, Red Ruffing of the Yank staf, with a gold watch and a few floral pieces.

Mule Haas, who has been stabled for a week because of a charley horse, may be able to take over his right field job this afternoon.

Bill Dickey, Yankee catcher, forever is getting a finger in the path of a foul ball. He did it in the third inning on a slider off Mike Kreevich's bat, and in the sixth was forced to retire for repairs.

Clarence [Brick] Owens, American league umpire, entered Mercy hospital yesterday for treatment for a throat infection.

RED SOX WHIP TIGERS, 18-3, IN TWO BIG INNINGS

Get Six Runs in Second, 12 in Fifth.

Detroit, Mich., July 25.—(AP)—The Boston Red Sox, with two big barrages of base hits, defeated the Detroit Tigers today in the second game of their series, 18 to 3.

Boston collected 20 hits off four Detroit pitchers, and scored all its runs in two big innings, the second and the fifth. Detroit got nine hits off Lefty Grove, but was able to score in only the third and fourth innings.

Tommy Bridges, seeking his 13th victory of the season, was hammered off the mound in the second, when the Red Sox scored six runs. Clarence Phillips replaced Bridges, and lasted until the fifth, when Boston scored 12 more runs on 10 hits off Phillips, Joe Sullivan, and Chad Kimsey. Score:

A'S, 15; INDIANS, 12.

Cleveland, O., July 25.—(AP)—The Philadelphia Athletics outslugged the Indians today to win, 15 to 12, dropping Cleveland a full game in the American league pennant race as New York trounced Chicago, 5 to 3.

Frank Hayes, Philadelphia catcher, broke a 12 all tie in the ninth inning when he connected with the bases loaded for his fourth double of the contest, scoring three runs. The veteran George Uhle, recently added to the Indians' active list, was charged with the defeat. Uhle hit a home run in the seventh.

Hayes equaled the major league record for two baggers in one game by hammering out his four doubles. The record was set first by Adrian Anson and Art Dalrymple in the same game for the Chicago National leaguers in 1883. It had been equaled several times, with Bill Werber of the Red Sox performing the trick last, on July 17, 1935.

VIRGINIA INGRAM WINS TITLE IN DISTRICT GOLF

Sunset Ridge Star Beats Mrs. Reinhardt, 1 Up.

BY CHARLES BARTLETT.

Virginia Ingram, Sunset Ridge golfer who has often been a contender but never a champion, finally came into her own yesterday when she won the championship of the Chicago Women's District association by defeating Mrs. S. L. Reinhardt Jr. of Northmoor, 1 up, in the 18 hole final at the Westmoreland Country club.

The title battle was truly a ball game, one of which any masculine competitor might well have been proud, for it wasn't settled until the final green, where Mrs. Reinhardt, former national runner up, paid a visit to a pair of ornery traps behind the putting surface. Each finished the round with medal cards of 83, five over women's par at Westmoreland.

Louise Johnson Wins Consolation.

Mrs. Reinhardt, one down at the turn, was three in arrears after the 12th, but made another of the rallies which have distinguished her play for several years, and by the time they reached the 17th tee, she had squared the match. They divided the 17th, and the decision followed on the home hole.

The title in the championship consolation flight was captured by young Louise Johnson of Mohawk, Illinois state public parks champion, who made her debut as a winner in the first Tribune golf school four years ago. Louise defeated Mrs. Floyd Hunt, Exmoor, 3 and 2, in the final.

Miss Ingram wasted no time in taking the lead, holing an eight foot putt on the first green for a birdie. The Sunset Ridge girl was two up after the third, where Mrs. Reinhardt chipped over the green, but Virginia lost that back at the next hole, falling short of the carpet with her second. At the sixth Mrs. Reinhardt jumped a stymie to earn a half in bogey fives.

Leads One Up at Turn.

The match was even after the seventh, where Miss Ingram was having trap trouble while Mrs. Reinhardt was getting her par, but the new champion regained the lead at the ninth, where she dropped a five footer for a one putt green, and her opponent needed three to get down.

A drive to the rough and a trapped second cost the Northmoor star the eleventh, and she was three down after the twelfth, where another bunker cost her a shot. She then staged the rally which brought her on even terms at the sixteenth. She drove the edge of the 205 yard thirteenth, hole high at the right, and was down in two from there for a birdie. Miss Ingram then lost the fourteenth by dubbing her drive to the right and trapping her second. She then earned a neat half at the fifteenth by dropping a six footer after Mrs. Reinhardt had put the issue up to her by holing one from twelve feet.

Virginia explored the rough all the way to the sixteenth, eventually taking six shots to hole out, and the match was even. They halved the seventeenth in fours, and then after both had good drives to the eighteenth, Mrs. Reinhardt put her second at the farthermost left trap. Her recovery turned up in the adjoining bunker, and she was on with her fourth. Miss Ingram, short with her second, put her third on and was up close enough to win.

Abbott Beats Rippy, 4 and 3, for Links Title

Farmingdale, N. Y., July 25.—(AP)—Buell Patrick Abbott, movie extra, became king of America's public fee courses today by winning the 15th national public links championship.

The pinch-faced golfer from Pasadena, who swung lazily and effortlessly as he scored birdies and pars, won the title before a gallery of 1,500 by stopping the headlong rush of Claude Rippy, Washington haberdashery salesman, 4 and 3, in a final that was closely fought for 25 holes.

Rippy's Wife Joins Him.

As Abbott held his rival four down through 27 holes, Rippy's wife, who had come to surprise her husband but didn't want him to see her, dashed out to join him. It was a psychological move on the part of Rippy's friends, but it didn't work. Abbott responded by leaving the Washington player enough openings almost to square the match, but then returned to par golf at the finish.

Through nine holes, they were all square. At the end of 18, Abbott, matching Rippy's medal card of 75, was one-up, a margin he hung on to through the 21st. Abbott thereafter played coolly as Rippy tired, and that was all.

Third Major Victory in Year.

The victory was the third important one for the movie extra over the space of a year. He won the western public links crown last summer, a title he will return to defend next month, and he upset an all-star professional field including MacDonald Smith, Walter Hagen, Olin Dutra and other stars to win the southern California open last January. In that tournament with a 72 hole medal card of 281, he led Lawson Little by 15 strokes.

Rippy gained solace out of the week's show, a tournament that attracted a record entry of 222 starters, however. He set a new national tournament record for nine holes with an outbound 30 on Tuesday and clinched a share of the tournament medal with Jim Molinari, San Francisco radio policeman.

City Amateur Golf Tourney On Tomorrow

The thirty-second annual Chicago amateur championship, grandpappy of all local golf tournaments, will dominate a full week of activity in the Chicago district this week. The city amateur, which has been fought on the Jackson park links for more than three decades, is not only one of the oldest events in the game but also one of the most unique. It was the first to adopt the all-match play plan from start to finish and the first to abolish stymies.

Entries will be accepted at the starting tee tomorrow from 8 a. m. until 1 p. m. The fee is $2.50, including greens fees for the entire tournament, which will continue through Saturday's 36 hole title match. Jack F. Kelly is chairman of the tournament committee.

Five Flights, Twelve Trophies.

The tournament field will include five flights with twelve trophies, including this year new trophies for the semi-finalists in the championship flights. This latter bracket will be restricted to players whose club handicaps range from 1 to 10 strokes, while the first flight will include players with handicaps of from 11 to 17, and the second flight will be for those with handicaps of over 17. Losers in the first round of the championship and the first flight may enter consolation flights, each of which carries two prizes.

The event is open to any bona fide amateur, and this year no club affiliations will be necessary. Each player entering the tourney will receive a souvenir button.

Mathisen Is Defender.

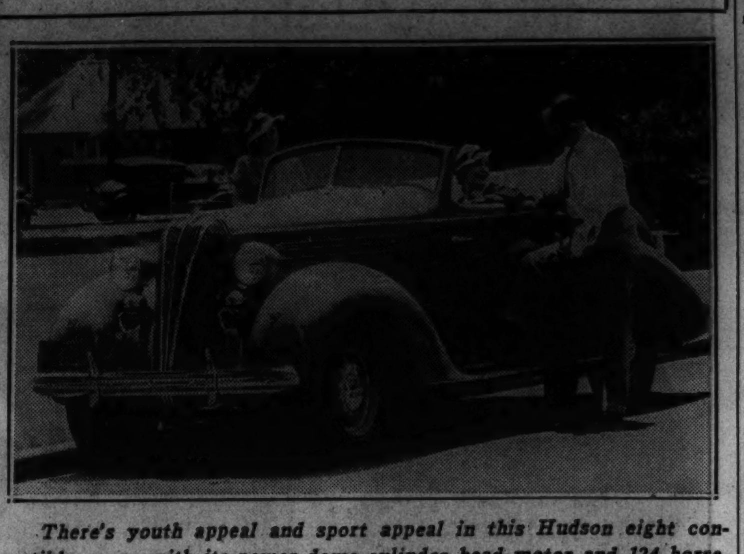
Defending the title will be Harold Mathisen, the capable chemist-golfer from Big Run, who has won it the last two years. If Mathisen is able to survive the six day test he will be the first three-time champion in the history of the tournament. Mathisen was a member of the national public links team that represented Chicago recently, and a number of out of town players who competed in the national, including Claude Rippy and Pat Abbott, who met in the final yesterday; Jimmy Molinari of San Francisco, and the Seattle and California teams are expected to be present at the starting tee tomorrow.

Today's program includes the first Sunday pro-amateur event of the year for Illinois P. G. A. members, to be held at Techny fields on Willow road near Waukegan road, and an exhibition match at Olympia fields, which will include Walter Hagen, now on tour of the Chicago district; Johnny Lehman, and Don Armstrong. Hagen will appear at Twin Orchards on Tuesday and at Midlothian on Wednesday.

Highlights of the Chicago District Golf association's competitive week will be the annual team championship. Twenty-three four-man groups, a record for the event, already have been named for the 36 hole event at Flossmoor on Tuesday. Edgewood Valley is the defending title holder, having won last year after a playoff with Bob O' Link and Glen Oak. Additional interest has been furnished by the entry of Onwentsia, which won eight times in nine years, but has not competed recently.

MOTORS—TRAFIC—HIGHWAYS

A SMART FOURSOME



There's youth appeal and sport appeal in this Hudson eight convertible coupe with its power dome cylinder head motor and 124 horsepower. There's utility, too, for the top can be raised quickly and easily, transforming it into a closed car.

VOICE OF TRAFIC

OPPOSES SAFETY INSPECTION.

Chicago, June 29.—Who is responsible for this new law requiring a test for all the automobiles in Chicago? The people have a right to know, so that the authors of this foolish legislation can be voted out of office.

On the surface it looks like a plot on the part of automobile manufacturers and garage owners to swell their profits. I predict that this law will meet the same fate as the jay-walking ordinance, another silly, unenforceable piece of legislation.

It is obvious that only new, or practically new, cars will meet the many requirements of this law. The vast majority of motorists, whose cars will fail to pass the numerous technicalities of the law, will be put to great trouble and expense, with the possibility of being deprived of their cars and paying heavy fines. Will the motoring public stand for it? I don't think so. INDIGNANT.

RIDICULOUS LAWS.

Chicago, July 23.—How long are the people of Chicago going to stand for the ridiculous trafic laws that are being so forcibly imposed upon them?

This testing of cars and strong [much too strong] trafic laws will decrease the amount of accidents a little, but any one knows that it is the fool behind the wheel and not the performance of the car that does the real damage.

The present setup strikes me as a good excuse to swell the coffers of the city.

Some day possibly a driver's license will be required and a lot of these color blind, half deaf, half blind people, along with the hundreds of minors found behind the wheel, will be restricted from driving. JOHN P. CERMINARO.

DON'T BELIEVE IN SIGNS.

Marshalltown, Ia., July 21.—I have driven cars since 1910 and previous to that used to ride motorcycles and know your city like a book. On my last trip down there two weeks ago I noticed where signs have been placed of different speed limits. I am sorry to report to you that your people of Chicago do not believe in signs, most surprised to see motorists go fifty and sixty miles per hour on Jackson boulevard or Washington or Michigan or the Outer drive where there are signs of thirty-five miles per hour speed limit. JOE PETRONE.

SLOW GARY.

Chicago, July 20.—Thanking "A Victim" for his information regarding speed trap in Wheeling, Ill. I also would have welcomed notice through the press or otherwise that the town of Gary, Ind., was operating a speed trap. Common sense and good judgment in driving count for nothing in Gary if you have an Illinois plate on your car. The speed limit of 30 M. P. H., which is as it should be in the town proper, extends for miles into the swamp land before you reach the town. ANOTHER VICTIM.

MARKED TRAFIC LANES.

Detroit, Mich., June 29.—As the originator and the first to use a white line to mark trafic lanes on highways, which I termed the center line safety stripe, I want to commend your campaign for its use on Chicago streets and boulevards.

It is an economical safety device and has probably saved more lives and minimized property damage to a greater degree than any other one safety measure.

The center line safety line has been in use on Wayne county concrete roads, where it was first applied, for nearly a quarter of a century.

EDWARD N. HINES,
County Road Commissioner, Wayne County [Detroit], Mich.

AUTO TEST LANES.

Chicago, July 23.—I would like to voice my opinion and that of a number of respectable citizens that I have recently contacted regarding this fool idea of automobile test lanes that has been put into service recently.

When will the dear public wake up and not be fooled any longer by political dominance? A new way has been paved for additional graft plain to be seen by reasonable thinking persons.

What right has any public official to reject one's personal [tax paid] automobile for such a trivial matter as a burned out parking light and require that he spend his precious time going all through the same procedure again? Will these same officials replace one's car for one they deem unfit for service due to such a minor defect? No!

Why not eliminate the sale of old used cars unfit for service? There is where the test should be made.

Judge Gorman has the right idea only he is still too lenient in handling automobile cases. W. A. B.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Ten simple but vital rules for safer driving are being publicized by Paul G. Hoffman, chairman safety trafic committee, Automobile Manufacturers' association, and president of the Studebaker corporation. One of them says: "If you have been drinking, don't drive. Of course, you believe you are sober, but the evidence is all against sober drivers who have been drinking."

Observation of the 20th anniversary of the organization of Nash Motors company to be held by Kenosha civic bodies July 29, it is announced, brings into emphasis interesting facts of automobile history which have taken place since the summer of 1916.

According to the Automobile Manufacturers' association records there were listed in that year 196 concerns engaged in manufacturing passenger cars—electric, steam, and gasoline. Some of the concerns produced more than one make of car. The total of the then current makes listed was 205. In all more than 600 motor car making concerns have come and gone since the industry was established. Sixteen only of the 205 designated domestic makes, as of 1916, have survived to this date.

Master guages which govern precision measurements at the Ford Motor company plant are kept at a uniform temperature of 68 degrees Fahrenheit in air-conditioned underground rooms.

Oldsmobile retail sales for the first ten days of July totaled 5,945 units, which represents a gain of more than 40 per cent in comparison to the same period a year ago, according to D. E. Ralston, vice president and general sales manager of Oldsmobile. From Jan. 1 to July 10, Oldsmobile dealers have delivered 116,784 new Oldsmobiles to retail purchasers. This is a gain of 29 per cent over the same period last year, which was the previous record year in Oldsmobile's history. During this same period, Jan. 1 to July 10, more new Oldsmobiles were sold than during the first nine months of 1935," Mr. Ralston stated.

Power Yachts End 787 Mile Run This Week

Power yachts will finish the first annual Mackinac Island cruise this week, when the fleet, led by Dr. O. E. Nadeau's cruiser flagship, Alice Dee, is scheduled to complete the 787 mile run.

Forty cruisers are participating in the trip from Chicago to Mackinac Island and return. The yachts left eight days ago to accompany the sailing craft that raced to the island. While the windjammers raced on, day and night, the cruisers put into three Michigan ports overnight, Saugatuck, Ludington, and Charlevoix.

Several days ago the cruisers left in single file from the island, and are on their way south down the Wisconsin shore of Lake Michigan.

The cruise is the longest organized run for motor yachts ever held. The 125 foot coast guard cutter, Rush, commanded by Boatswain T. G. Wollard, is accompanying the boats.

The cruise committee includes:

Philip K. Wrigley, Chicago Yacht club, owner of 88 foot Wasp; Fred Fisher, Detroit Yacht club, owner of 234 foot Nakoda; Mark Hanna, Detroit Yacht club; Charles Kettering, Detroit and New York Yacht clubs, owner of 168 foot Olive K.; S. L. Lambert of St. Louis, Biscayne Bay, Fla., Yacht club, owner of 77 foot Flight; R. E. Olds, Lansing, Mich., Detroit and New York Yacht clubs, owner of 133 foot Reomar; Kenneth G. Smith, Chicago Yacht club, owner of 101 foot Kenkora; C. H. Bliss, Kenosha, Wis., Chicago and Milwaukee Yacht clubs, owner of 80 foot Maid Marian II.; Charles Sorenson, Detroit Yacht club, owner of 146 foot Helene; Charles R. Walgreen, Chicago Yacht club, owner of 136 foot Dixonia; Commander Eugene F. McDonald Jr., Chicago, Jackson Park, Columbia Yacht clubs, owner of 185 foot Mizpah; Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald of Michigan, Erwin G. Uihlein, Milwaukee Yacht club, owner of 120 foot schooner Atlantic; Commodore Gar Wood, Detroit Yacht club, owner of 75 foot Gar Sr., and 38 foot Miss America X.

WEATHERDAMAGE TO STATE ROADS SET AT $500,000

Most Destructive Seven Months in History.

BY HAL FOUST.

Springfield, Ill., July 25.—[Special.]—The severe cold of last winter, the excessive rain of early spring, and the intense heat of the summer have combined to cause damage and depreciation to the Illinois highway system this year estimated at more than a half million dollars. According to veteran state engineers, the weather has been more destructive during the last seven months than at any time in the history of Illinois' hard roads.

The expansion and contraction of concrete with variations of temperature constitute an engineering problem that is a long way from solution although some progress has been made in the last two decades. It's the expansion under summer sun that causes slabs to buckle. Such explosions have been common this month.

From a cursory inspection of a few thousand miles of highway in the Tribune roadster in the last couple of months, it appears that there is much mileage that will have to be replaced years before the retirement of the bonds that financed their construction. Motorists will continue to pay interest and principal on pavements no longer in use.

Tendency to Cool.

The engineers have made more progress in providing for the daily variations in temperature than they have for the seasonal changes. After the sun sets, the top surface of the slab is cooled more rapidly than the bottom, which retains some of the warmth of the day. The outer edges, therefore, rise slightly; the full weight on the edges no longer rests on the earth foundation.

This tendency to curl used to cause long, irregular longitudinal cracks in the pavement. This type of cracking has been reduced by the center line seam that was introduced into pavement design about 1920.

Most of the breaking on slabs built since 1920 is due to longitudinal stresses. Concrete is elastic. In the jargon of the road builders, it grows. Each time it is expanded by a rise in temperature, it contracts again when the mercury recedes, but it doesn't contract for the full distance that it was stretched.

Cracks Aggravate Damage.

This "growth" is aggravated by cracks. In low temperatures, with the slab contracted, the cracks are wide and are packed with dirt. They are unable to close when heat again expands the concrete. This causes buckles or explosions in hot weather.

Some of the cracks are caused by over loaded trucks, but even more are caused by temperature influences. In contracting, the slab must drag its weight over the ground. It lacks tensile strength to do this for any great mass. Steel has about the same expansion coefficient as concrete, but its tensile strength is great so railroad engineers are better able than highway engineers to provide for expansion and contraction. Furthermore the rails slide on steel plates whereas the slab is in contact with the high friction offered by the ground.

Early in highway building designers tried transversal seams to care for the longitudinal movements due to temperature changes. The seams were packed with a bituminous filler that would bulge from the surface in warm weather. You have driven such pavements with a thump, thump, thump, like a flat tire, as you crossed the seams. In cold weather the seams gap and fill with dirt, gravel, and other extraneous matter so they no longer accommodate expansion.

Copper Expansion Joint.

In the last three years Illinois has been experimenting with a sealed transversal joint with a copper cover to protect the the gap during low temperatures. According to Chief Engineer Ernst Lieberman, these have been fairly successful. More experience with maintaining slab with these joints may be needed to determine whether the device justifies its addition to the original cost of the pavement.

The expansion coefficient of average concrete slab is .0000066, which is a way of saying that 6,600,000 inches of pavement will expand one inch with each rise of one degree Fahrenheit. With a 20 degree rise in temperatures from night to day, a mile slab will expand 8.36 inches. With 100 degrees rise from winter to summer, the expansion in a mile of concrete road is nearly 42 inches.

BANKERS URGED TO REVEAL REAL DANGERS IN FDIC

Tell Depositors All, Leader Warns.

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo. July 25.—[Special.]—In a stirring speech here today Orval W. Adams, a leading banker, warned fellow bankers that they must no longer remain silent, but must tell their depositors the dangers that lie in the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation and the administration's policies.

Adams, executive vice president of the Utah State National bank, Salt Lake City, Utah, is second vice president of the American Bankers' association, and according to custom should become head of the association in 1937. He spoke here before the Montana Bankers' association on "If Our Depositors Only Knew!"

He explained that he was speaking as an individual and not on behalf of the A. B. A., but his position nevertheless bore weight in impressing the attending bankers.

"Danger Greater Now."

"Complaint is made that in 1929 we were silent when we should have spoken," Adams said. "The danger now is far greater than then. Let us not make it possible for history to record that in this supreme hour the bankers of America, out of silence induced by fear, failed both their depositors and their country.

"When the future of the nation and the welfare of its people are involved mere party politics sink into insignificance. The issue is no longer one of mere partisanship, but of simple honesty and genuine patriotism."

Concerning the FDIC, Adams said: "The average depositor relies in part upon the security afforded through insurance of deposits in the FDIC. But does the average depositor know that that corporation, to protect its deposits, holds total assets of some $340,000,000, of which about $320,000,000 consist of bonds of the United States?

"To put it bluntly, the primary function of the FDIC today is to protect banks against the risk of loss resulting from depreciation in bonds of the United States, and this it accomplishes through the ownership of such bonds itself.

Hinges on High Market.

"Does the average depositor realize that apart from such assets the FDIC has only the banks to look to to the extent of their annual assessments, and that today ability to pay such assessments rests primarily upon the continuance of the present high market for bonds of the United States?

"Does the average depositor realize that the government has become the banker's main customer as a result of the accumulated effects of the experimental policies of the administration, of continued threats to industry, and of the consequent destruction of confidence in the future?

"Do our depositors understand that the seemingly plump and wholesome condition of the banks does not reflect health, but bloat; that excess reserves represent in principal part the purchase of the obligations of government and the credits created in favor of government upon such purchases?

"Does the average depositor understand that by insuring deposits in the FDIC, what the government has really done is tantamount to insuring itself against threatened lack of funds, to discourage the depositors of America from resorting to the old practice of hiding their savings in a wool sock, to coax out this money from its hiding place and bring it into the vaults of the banks where it can be made easily accessible to the federal government?"

Can't Insure Against Profit Loss.

He explained that the FDIC cannot insure against loss of earnings through unavoidable reductions in interest rates, nor against loss of principal through inflation.

"The action of the Reconstruction Finance corporation in reducing interest rates, followed within a day or two by the action of the Federal Reserve board in increasing reserve requirements, tells the story of the determination of the administration to prevent any return to normal channels of financing industry; its determination to preserve for the use of government the resources of the commercial banks; to prevent such resources from finding another market," he continued.

"As bankers, we are not concerned in partisan issues. It matters not to us by what party results are accomplished, but it does matter to us that sound principles be applied in government; that the teachings of history be not utterly ignored; that the principles upon which this country has been built be preserved."

Courses Open to Bankers.

The most impressive phrases of his indictment were contained in his discussion of courses open to bankers.

"Some things we can do," he said. "We can go to our depositors with the facts. We have their names and addresses. Many of them we know personally. We can and should give them the whole story.

"Why don't we tell them that the federal government has been enabled to indulge in its wild orgy of spending, because we, the bankers of America, have loaned it the money that was placed with us for safety and sound investment by the wage earners, the professional men, the clerks, the widows, the domestics, the farmers, and all others who live within their means and save?

"Why don't we tell them that the federal government came direct to us, and got the money and got it

PASSENGER 'PICKUP' SERVICE, LOW FARES BOOST LINES' TRAFIC

Iowa City, Ia., July 25.—(AP)—The Cedar Rapids and Iowa City Railway company reported today that "doorstep pickup and delivery" of its passengers, combined with a fare reduction, has increased its passenger trafic revenue nearly 25 per cent.

"This train-taxi service," declared C. E. Ingersoll, trafic manager of the interurban line," is proving successful even beyond our fondest expectations."

Four years ago the line started truck pickup and delivery of freight at both terminals. This doubled the interurban's freight business.

"A few months ago we decided to see if it would work with passengers," Ingersoll said. "We arranged for taxi pickup and delivery at both terminal cities for 10 cents a person, and reduced passenger fares 35 per cent. All a passenger had to do was to call the ticket office and he could ride all the way from where he was to where he wanted to be.

"Nearly every person traveling by interurban from Cedar Rapids to Iowa City used the taxi service. It is used slightly less at Cedar Rapids because many passengers are shoppers who go only a few blocks from the interurban station.

WORK AND WAGES INCREASE DURING JUNE IN ILLINOIS

Increases in employment and pay rolls in Illinois during June exceeded the slight upturn usually experienced in that month. Although industrial activity in Chicago's intermediate trade territory edged forward, as defined by the boundaries of the seventh federal reserve district, wage totals showed no corresponding increase over the larger area.

These movements were reported yesterday by the Illinois department of labor and the federal reserve bank of Chicago. No estimate of the jobless total currently is available either for Illinois or for the seventh federal reserve district.

Speaking of Illinois during June against May, the department of labor said: "The statistical summary of the data returned by reporting enterprises shows increases of 0.9 per cent in employment and 1.9 per cent in total wage payments. For 1923-35, inclusive, the records show that the average May-June changes were increases of 0.1 per cent in employment and 0.8 per cent in pay rolls.

INT. HARVESTER WORKERS TO GET EXTRA PAYMENTS

Improved earnings of the International Harvester company, which were disclosed to stockholders Friday when directors increased the dividend rate to $2.50 annually, will also be passed along to employés, officials decided yesterday.

Effective Oct. 31, employés who have been with the company one year or more will receive an extra week's compensation. Employés who have been with the company two years or more will get two week's pay.

Officials also disclosed that the company's pension plan, which has been maintained without expense to employés since 1908, will undergo modifications made necessary by the federal social securities act. They declined to give details, but it was indicated the revisions will leave employés in a less favorable position under the federal plan than under the system carried on by the company, which some time ago establish had an irrevocable trust to insure continuation of the plan.

INDEX SHOWS INDUSTRY RISES TO 6 YEAR PEAK

Reserve Bank Earnings Fall; Slash Stafs

BY HOWARD WOOD.

Their earnings drastically reduced by the treasury's "easy money" policy, and their surpluses raided by the government to finance the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation and the construction of a new reserve board building in Washington, the twelve federal reserve banks are striving desperately to keep from dipping into their remaining surpluses to pay 1936 dividends. This is disclosed by the reserve board's announcement that it is launching an "economy survey" to help the twelve reserve banks cut down their operating expenses.

Figures for the first half year show that the twelve central banks combined, during that period actually failed to earn their semi-annual dividends. Each reserve bank is owned by the commercial member banks in its district and the member banks carry their stock investment in the reserve banks among the assets on their balance sheets.

Why Earnings Decrease.

Chief cause of the drop in earnings of the reserve banks has been the steady decline in interest rates on United States government securities, which now constitute by far the greater part of the assets of these central banks and the income from which provide 96 per cent of their earnings.

In 1933 the average rate of return on long term government bonds was 3.31 per cent. Now it is 2.51 per cent. During the last year alone the average yield on government short term paper has dropped from 0.17 per cent to 0.09 per cent.

Joseph P. Broderick, a member of the reserve board in Washington, is visiting each of the twelve banks, checking its operating methods and pay rolls, and suggesting means of accomplishing additional savings.

Hundreds Lose Jobs.

The economy wave, however, has been under way for several months. Hundreds of employés—many of them old timers—have been dropped from the pay rolls recently in order to save money. In addition, the elimination of high salaried officers, dictated by the board in Washington, has reduced overhead. An annual saving of $240,000 alone has resulted from the board's order making the position of chairman of the board of the individual banks an honorary instead of a salaried job.

Scores of employés of the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago, including the important Detroit branch, are reported to have received their walking papers during recent weeks. According to officials of the bank most of these individuals have been on the rolls of temporary agencies set up by the bank to handle certain assignments from Washington. From other sources, however, it was learned that some of the bank's employés of years' standing have been let out. In most cases those discharged have received "dismissal wages" of one to six months' salary.

Chicago Staf Reduced.

The economy program is understood to have cut off some of the higher ranking employés of the Chicago bank and others, including at least one officer, are reported to be scheduled for dismissal. The division of research and statistics, headed by Harris G. Pett, is reported to have been scaled down and the work taken over by Vice President Charles R. McKay.

The Chicago bank, partly as a result of such economies, is expected to earn its statutory 6 per cent dividend this year, and the New York bank is reported to have similar prospects. Some of the smaller reserve banks are understood to be facing still more drastic reductions in overhead, following the head chopping tour of Gov. Broderick.

The raid on the funds of the federal reserve banks began two years ago when 139 million dollars—half their surplus—was expropriated by congress to help finance the FDIC. It continued last year with assessments to build a new building in Washington to house the federal reserve board.

Required to Buy U. S. Securities.

In addition, during the last few years the twelve reserve banks have been required to buy more government securities, raising their total holdings of such paper to a total of nearly two and a half billion dollars. As interest rates on government paper have been forced down by the treasury's "easy money" program the income of the twelve banks has been proportionately reduced. Normally, the reserve banks have substantial income from holdings of commercial paper and from interest on bank loans and discounts to commercial banks. Because of the "easy money" policy, however, the commercial banks are not at present resorting to loans at the reserve banks and the available supply of commercial paper is so small that the reserve banks get little of it.

As a result the reserve banks have degenerated into little more than investment trusts with government securities as their portfolios. Consequently, they not only have less income to cover their pay rolls, but they do not need so many employés.

Main Source of Earnings.

The importance to the twelve central banks of the return on government loans is shown by the fact that of their combined gross earnings of $42,751,000 last year $39,796,000 came from interest paid on government securities. Net earnings of these banks was $9,437,000, of which $8,505,000 was required for the 6 per cent dividends authorized by law. In 1934 net earnings were $15,231,000 and in 1932, $22,314,000.

The Federal Reserve bank of Chicago last year earned $771,220, or only $17,637 more than the $753,583 requirement for dividends.

COMMODITY PRICES SHOW UPWARD TREND DURING LAST WEEK

Commodity prices last week were generally on the upgrade. Cocoa sold at the best figure in three years and closed within a few points of the top. Reports indicated speculators are long both spot and future cocoa. Old crop deliveries of corn advanced to a new high level for this season of the year since 1929.

Lard, hogs, cotton, eggs, coffee, cottonseed oil, and hides were slightly higher for the week, while butter lost a small fraction. The latter is selling about 9¼ cents per pound above the level which prevailed a year ago, reflecting reduced production incident to the drouth, which has ruined pastures.

Sugar futures declined sharply as the result of an AAA ruling that no quota would be assigned to Porto Rican producers this season.

Closing prices for the last two weeks on a representative list of commodities, with the high and low levels for the season, follow:

TRADE IN GRAIN SHRINKS; CORN DIPS, RECOVERS

More Rain Forecast; Wheat Is Steady.

Speculative interest in the grain markets yesterday was at the lowest ebb in several weeks. Wheat held within a range of about 1 cent and closed practically unchanged. Corn dipped early on reports of showers in parts of Iowa and Illinois, and on the forecast indicating additional precipitation over the week-end. Short covering caused a strong rally from the inside figures with the close ⅛ to 1⅛ cents higher. Oats declined fractionally and rye was slightly higher.

The unsettled European political situation, according to members of the Chicago Board of Trade, is having the effect of materially reducing public speculative interest in wheat, while in corn the uncertainty as to weather conditions tends to deter many from coming into the market.

Wheat Prices Higher Abroad.

American wheat markets were relatively easy yesterday compared with those abroad. July wheat in Liverpool sold at a new high for the season and futures were up ⅝ to 1½ cents. Winnipeg gained ⅜ to ½ cent. The Canadian market has been gaining ground compared with Minneapolis in the last few days, with the result that American mill purchases of Canadian cash wheat have been somewhat reduced, although liberal amounts were secured earlier in the week. The European demand yesterday was reported to be small.

Trading in July wheat and other grains will cease on the Chicago Board of Trade when the market closes next Tuesday. The last three business days of the month will be utilized to make deliveries of cash grain on July future contracts.

Expect Rise in Visible Supply.

An increase of about 10,000,000 bushels in the domestic visible supply of wheat is expected to be shown in Monday's official statement, following an increase of nearly 14,000,000 bushels the preceding week. The bulk of the grain, it is said, was hedging by sales of futures sometime ago.

Closing prices on the September delivery of leading grains with comparisons follow:

	Yesterday.	Friday.	Week ago.	Mo. ago.
Wheat	$1.03½	$1.03¼	$1.01⅛	$ .93¾
Corn	.88⅝	.87¼	.85⅝	.65⅛
Oats	.36	.36⅛	.37	.31
Rye	.72¾	.72⅝	.69⅝	.63⅝

Hedging sales of September corn against purchases of over 200,000 bushels of the cash article bought for deferred shipment from the country had some effect on the market early yesterday.

Rains Light Over Corn Belt.

While some sections of Illinois received sufficient rain overnight to be of material benefit to the new corn crop, the precipitation in the main was light, and unfavorable comments as to the general situation were numerous. The intense heat which has prevailed in the past week over the greater part of Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Missouri is said to have caused extremely heavy damage.

Increased hedging pressure was reported to be largely responsible for the easiness in oats futures. Houses with Winnipeg connections sold December rye, but there was no material pressure otherwise.

TRANS-U. S. PLANE FREIGHT SERVICE PLANNED BY TWA

Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., plans to offer a national freight plane service late in September, it was disclosed yesterday. The plans provide for using Ford tri-motored planes with all seats stripped and special doors replacing the passenger entrances. Tests conducted by the company have shown that such ships, carrying approximately 3,500 pounds, could be operated profitably.

General Air Express, Inc., which is owned by TWA, is now seeking information on the amount of steady cargoes that would be available for such a service. Under consideration by the company are commitments to haul two shiploads of flowers weekly from Los Angeles to New York and Chicago. Radio and automobile parts, food products and clothing would move westward in return.

Adverse weather conditions would not interfere with such a freight service, it was said, since no passengers would be carried, pilots would carry parachutes, and planes would be equipped with blind flying and landing instruments.

Transit Revenues Fall, but Exceed Those of 1935

The Transit Journal reports revenues of the transit industry for the week ended July 18 showed continuing improvement over last year but declined seasonally compared with the preceding week.

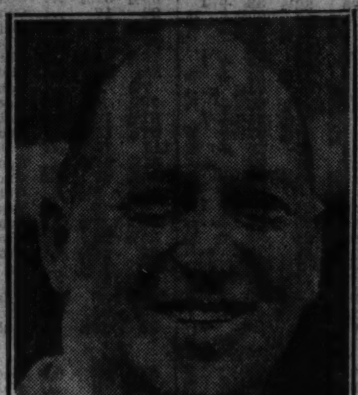
BUSINESS NEWS IN REVIEW

Chrysler Pays Big Dividend as Profits Rise—Many Companies' Earnings at High Levels—Business Pace Accelerated—Auto Output Rises—Stock Prices Advance, Led by Motor Issues.

One day in 1925 a new automobile company made its bow to American business and took its place as twenty-seventh in the industry. Headed by an energetic young man, Walter P. Chrysler, the new concern represented an outgrowth of the Maxwell Motor corporation, which four years earlier had acquired the Chalmers Motor corporation. It took the name of its organizer.

Last week the Chrysler corporation, third largest producers of automobiles in the world, announced it will pay a dividend of $4 a share to its stockholders, the third increase this year. The payment will bring total distributions for 1936 to $6.50 or just short of the $6.83 a share which was earned during the first half year, an all time high record for the company.



WALTER P. CHRYSLER.

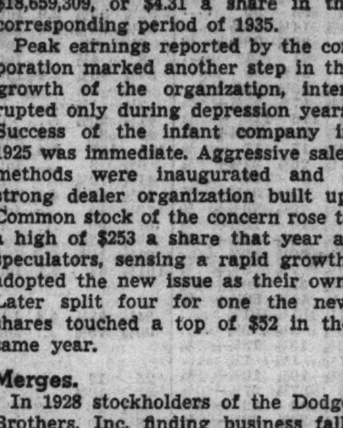
Profit.

The big corporation which last year made about one out of every four passenger cars sold in the United States, announced its net profit for the half year at $29,473,736, against $18,659,309, or $4.31 a share in the corresponding period of 1935.

Peak earnings reported by the corporation marked another step in the growth of the organization, interrupted only during depression years. Success of the infant company in 1925 was immediate. Aggressive sales methods were inaugurated and a strong dealer organization built up. Common stock of the concern rose to a high of $253 a share that year as speculators, sensing a rapid growth, adopted the new issue as their own. Later split four for one the new shares touched a top of $52 in the same year.

Merges.

In 1928 stockholders of the Dodge Brothers, Inc. finding business falling off, welcomed an offer to merge with Chrysler, then assuming a dominant place in the industry. On July 30 business of the Dodge concern was taken over and Chrysler moved into third place as a builder of automobiles.



HORACE E. DODGE.

That year new Chrysler common stock reached its all time high of $140.75. In the following year a price of $135 was paid for the stock but a low mark of $26 was also chalked up in the disastrous stock market crash. Successively lower levels were recorded until the all time low mark of $5 was registered in 1932.

Steady appreciation occurred from that time on, but progress was slow and it was not until last year, when the automotive industry returned to its full stride, that subtantial gains were recorded. Last year Chrysler became a favorite of speculators and was whirled up to $93.87 a share. This year it reached a new high level when the stock rose to $121.67½ yesterday.

History.

The individual histories of Chrysler and John F. and Horace E. Dodge contain most of the story of the building up of the mammoth corporation. Chrysler was born on an Iowa farm and taken to Ellis, Kan., as a boy. His formal education ended with his second year in high school, when he took a workman's job with the Union Pacific at Ellis and performed a variety of tasks in the next few years in Texas, Kansas, Utah, Colorado and Illinois.

His rise was steady. In 1911, when he quit railroad work for the automobile field, he was general manager of the American Locomotive company at Pittsburgh. He went to Buick company and became its president. Later he joined Willys-Overland, leaving that company for the Chalmers and Maxwell concerns.

John and Horace Dodge, who turned their machine shop, in which they did manual labor, into an automobile factory, had made one of the most spectacular successes in the motor world. After the brothers died their widows continued the business for a time. But in 1925, all the Dodge Brothers properties were sold to a syndicate for cash and the bargain was closed with a check for $146,000,000.

Confronted with a falling off in business in 1927 Dodge stockholders welcomed consolidation with an outstanding competitor, a consolidation which cemented Chrysler's position as one of the leaders in the field, and a post which it has held since.

Earnings.

The accelerated pace of business as reflected in earnings statements during the current year gathered new impetus last week. Reports were issued by a long list of leading industrial concerns for the second quarter and first half year which showed sharp gains over 1935 and in many instances new all time high records.

Outstanding was the report of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., leading chemical manufacturer. Its second quarter earnings were the largest in its history, amounting to $2.06 a share, and the best for any quarter since the March period of 1929. In the second three months of 1935 the concern earned 89 cents a share.

Packard Motor Car company, which employs more than 10,000 persons, reported a spectacular profit rise for the first half year. Net was $3,520,128, the largest for any six months since the first half of 1930. It earned $290,460 in the corresponding 1935 period.

More Gains.

Profits of the Texas corporation, oil refining and distributing concern, in the first half of 1935, nearly equaled the total for all of 1935, amounting to $16,000,000, against $16,052,986 for all of the preceding year.

United States Gypsum company announced a net profit for the half year of $2,241,774, against $1,627,477 in the same months of 1935. Illinois Bell Telephone company listed net income of $6,112,000 for the first six months, a gain of nearly 2 million dollars over the $4,334,000 earned in the 1935 period. Union Carbide and Carbon corporation, whose subsidiaries operate more than 160 plants and factories in this country, Canada, and abroad, reported June quarter net income the best since 1930. It totaled $7,937,000, compared with $5,333,000 in the corresponding period last year.

The Youngstown Sheet & Tube company, first of the major steel companies to report for the second quarter, announced a net profit of $2,588,000, largest for the period in six years. It earned only $125,000 in the 1935 period.

Business.

Meanwhile business moved along at the highest levels since July, 1931. The usual seasonal slump, normally experienced during summer months, failed to materialize and contraseasonal demand and production made for a relatively stable condition. Drouth retarded industrial activity and sales in scattered areas but the aggregate volume was not affected perceptibly. Labor difficulties had no effect other than to boost orders slightly from cautious customers.

Orders taxed the capacity of wholesalers. Retailers, viewing the unexpectedly rapid pace at which merchandise has moved into consumption, advanced by 10 to 20 per cent the original limits set for fall budgets.

Autos.

Automobile production climbed to just below the 100,000 unit level and statistical agencies confidently predicted July output will amount to 445,000 units, or only 5 per cent under the June figure.

Freight.

Railroad freight trafic dipped slightly as the result of drouth losses but maintained a wide margin of gain over recent years.

Steel.

Steel operations climbed 2 points to 70½ per cent of theoretical productive capacity and almost equaled the best week of the year. The midsummer outlook was termed the best in years.

Bank Clearings.

Bank clearings rose nearly 8 per cent and business insolvencies were

STOCKS MOUNT; CHRYSLER SETS PACE FOR LIST

Auto Issue Rises to New Peak Price.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, July 25.—Fresh price gains of 1 to 3 points were marked up in nearly all sections of the stock list in today's week-end dealings. A few issues made an even better showing. Gulf States Steel finished the session an even $5 a share above yesterday's closing level, while Westinghouse Electric showed a net improvement of more than 4 points.

Trading was on a rather quiet scale, which is to say that buying, while persistent, was not particularly avid. As usual on a midsummer Saturday commission house attendance was on a reduced scale and many brokers were absent from their posts for the week-end. Some realizing sales dribbled into the picture but they were not sufficiently numerous to provide anything suggestive of a test for the movement.

Chrysler Leads Upswing.

The upswing was paced by Chrysler, which moved up 3½ points to a new high of 121⅝ on the strength of its overnight announcement of a $4 dividend. The opening on the issue was delayed, as was to be expected, due to difficulty in arriving at a price.

It was nearly 10:15 o'clock before the opening was determined as 5,000 shares at 120¼, which was not a new high for the year. However, the next sale was 200 shares at 120½, duplicating the high of the year, and a few minutes later the stock sold at 120⅝, setting a new high since 1929. Another point was added in later trading.

Wall street had been prepared for a big opening because of the unprecedently large dividend declared yesterday. Moreover, Chrysler was bid up to 121½ on the San Francisco Stock exchange yesterday after the close here.

Other Motor Shares Rise.

The Chrysler stock's performance was an inspiration to other motors and, indeed, to the whole list. General Motors, whose dividend action and earnings statement are due next Monday, was bid up a point, while Packard, Hudson, and Auburn trailed along for more modest gains.

Aircraft issues turned in a good performance. Many traders are bullish on these shares, due to the belief that domestic companies will show a spurt in operations because foreign aircraft manufacturers now have their hands full supplying armament needs overseas.

In the power and light division, Columbia Gas and Electric climbed into new high ground above 22, and Consolidated Edison attracted attention at better levels. North American came within a shade of its best 1936 price.

Steel Issues in Good Demand.

Steel shares met with good demand, with United States Steel rising more than a point, and some of the rails looked up a bit, although activity was not particularly spectacular in either group.

Several so-called blue chips including du Pont, Allied Chemical, and Western Union, moved ahead a point or so.

Sears-Roebuck jumped nearly $2 a share in the mail order department. Some of the other merchandise descriptions also fared well, including Spiegel-May-Stern with a rise of $3 a share.

One of the few outstanding weak spots was Case Threshing Machine, which sold off a couple of points on drouth reflections. Central Railroad of New Jersey dropped 1½ and Electric Auto Lite, a spectacular performer on the upside in recent sessions, eased fractionally on the "good news" of its 50 cents extra dividend.

Some observers predicted the market is beginning to discount improved industrial operations in the autumn.

Other figures for the month and a year ago were: Missouri Pacific, $717,221, against $7,748; St. Louis-San Francisco, $306,837, against operating loss of $630,197.; Seaboard Airline, income of $35,463, compared with operating loss of $41,108; Jersey Central income, $47,202, against $408,474; Delaware & Hudson, $218,295, compared with $275,983.

DECEMBER LARD ADVANCES. OTHER FUTURES IRREGULAR

Investment buying of December lard by commission houses was again in evidence yesterday, with the close 2½ cents higher. Trade in the aggregate was light. Other deliveries closed unchanged to 2½ cents lower. Clear bellies [salt pork] closed nominally unchanged. CHRYSLER MOTOR GROWTH RAPID; PROFITS LARGE the smallest for any week of the last sixteen years.

Many Companies Report Increased Earnings.

Stocks.

Under the leadership of motor shares the stock market scored a further gain last week. Motors wavered as the time approached Friday for the Chrysler corporation directors' meeting, but turned strong again yesterday.

Farm implement issues advanced on official statements that farm income is at the highest levels since 1930. Douglas made wide gains to head a rise in aircrafts. Several oils advanced. Rails did well on sharp gains in June net operating income.

Copper shares moved higher in the wake of a favorable budget of news for the industry. Copper sales in the domestic market this month have broken all records. The market was particularly active prior to a boost of ¼ cent a pound to 9¾ cents during the week, a new high since 1931.

Utility shares just held their own because of profit taking. Electrical equipments mounted to new high marks and then lost ground. Communications issues eased slightly. For a time International Telephone encountered selling as a result of the Spanish uprising but recovered part of the loss later. A long list of special issues made wide gains.

Wages.

A uniform arrangement for overtime compensation was announced by the United States Steel corporation. Effective Aug. 1, it will apply to 150,000 of the corporation's 220,000 employés. Overtime work will be paid for at the rate of one and one-half times the normal pay for all work in excess of 8 hours daily, or 48 hours weekly. Similar announcements were made by other steel companies.

Utilities.

In Washington the government carried to the Supreme court its fight to have the constitutionality of the public utility holding company act of 1935 tested through the Electric Bond and Share case instead of through law suits brought by the North American company, American Water Works and Electric company, and five other utilities. Solicitor General Reed filed with the high court a brief asking reversal of the action by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in upsetting the District Supreme court order staying proceedings in the suits of North American and American Water Works until the Electric Bond and Share case had been concluded.

The government hopes to avoid a multiplicity of suits which have been filed by utility companies. The utilities contend the Electric Bond case is not representative. All cases concern the government's power to force utilities to register with the Securities and Exchange commission.

Foreign Trade.

America's foreign trade in June again favored other nations after showing a favorable balance in May. Foreigners sold the United States more goods than they bought to the amount of $7,045,000. Imports totaled $192,233,000; exports were $185,188,000.

Food Prices.

Higher prices for canned foods were forecast for the coming season as the result of unfavorable crop conditions in most of the important vegetable producing sections. The size of this year's pack is still a matter of conjecture, but it is expected to fall below that of 1935. Government reports indicate a sharp curtailment in production of fruits and it is believed that unfavorable conditions now prevailing will be translated into higher prices for household products.

Freight Rates.

In a move to aid farmers of the drouth stricken northwest, railroads of the western trunk line association cut tarifs on hay 33 1-3 per cent and on roughage feeds 50 per cent. They apply in sections of Montana, North and South Dakota, and Wyoming.

NEW DEAL'S AIR MAIL ACT AGAIN HURTS BUSINESS

Bars TWA from Purchase of Property.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., July 25.—An-ther example of government inter-rence with private business and the amstringing effects of the New eal's air mail act of 1934 is shown y the postoffice department's refusal o permit Transcontinental and West-rn Air to purchase property of the raniff Air Lines, including two air ail contracts.

TWA applied for approval by the ostmaster general of an agreement o purchase assets of the Braniff nes, including A. M. route No. 9 rom Chicago to Dallas and A. M. oute No. 15 from Amarillo to Gal-eston and Brownsville, with TWA apital stock to be distributed among raniff shareholders.

The Braniff lines have not been ble to conduct a profitable business ith the air mail rates imposed nder the New Deal act and TWA roposed to establish a superior serv-e to that now being conducted over he routes.

Rules Plan Violates Law.

But Karl A. Crowley, solicitor of he postoffice department, has ruled at the proposed purchase of assets ould violate section 7 [b] of the air ail act, which provides:

"After Dec. 31, 1934, it shall be un-awful [1] for any partnership, asso-iation, or corporation, the principal usiness of which . . . is the holding tock in other corporations or [2] r any partnership, association or orporation engaged directly or in-irectly in any phase of the aviation ndustry . . . to buy, acquire, hold, wn, or control . . . any shares of tock or other interests in any other artnership, association, or corpora-on which holds an air mail con-ract."

"And it follows," Crowley's opinion eclared, "that if Braniff Airways, nc., is to remain a separate corpora-ion and engage in any phase of the viation industry, it cannot lawfully cquire shares of stock proposed to e issued to it by TWA in considera-ion of the assignment of the two air ail contracts."

Argument of TWA.

George Whiteside, counsel for TWA, nsisted that the transaction was to e a simple purchase of assets; that was not an agreement that would esult in any common control of con-racts; that it was not in any sense merger; that the Braniff Airways, nc., would continue to be a separate orporation, with some corporate prop-rty in its possession and power to cquire more corporate property.

The American Airlines, however, rotested that public interest re-uired the independence of the Ama-illo-Brownsville link to Central and outh America so that all competing ines would receive their share of the ir mail.

Crowley's opinion, sustaining the ontention of the American Airlines, mplied that the taking over of the marillo-Brownsville link by TWA ould result in a monopoly of the usiness coming from Texas and Mex-co.

Answers Service Offer.

Replying to TWA's proposal to pro-ide a superior public service, the olicitor said:

"Advantages which it might seem t present would accrue to the public y the institution of what is pro-osed as a superior service might be st to the public in the future by limination of all competition in and ut of southern Texas and Mexico."

The opinion said the Braniff Lines lready had made application for rate evisions and suggested: "If it should e determined by the department that his line should be designated as a rimary line it should be allowed ates that would enable it to continue o give first class service."

WORLD WHEAT IMPORTS SHOW LARGE UPTURN

OTTAWA, Ont., July 25.—(AP)The do-inion bureau of statistics in its onthly review of the world wheat ituation said today world net im-orts of wheat and wheat flour for he crop year ending July 31 will ap-roximate 500,000,000 bushels, an in-rease of about 84,000,000 bushels over he preceding year.

The bureau predicted the exporta-le supply of Canadian wheat in the 936-'37 season will probably be the owest since 1924-'25 and will be at east 100,000,000 bushels less than in 935-'36.

Summer Travel Is Reported Heaviest Since Boom Days

BY WILLIAM YATES.

America is definitly on the move. The innate desire to travel, suppressed for several depression years, is finding expression this season in a volume reminiscent of the 1929 boom times. Transportation agencies and travel bureaus report the heaviest vacation business in years. Gains range as high as 60 per cent over 1935 and further increases are expected as the season advances.

Improved economic conditions are ascribed as the chief reason for the surge in travel, but other factors have played a part. Air lines, which heretofore have concentrated on speed in transportation, made a definite bid this year for vacation business by featuring daylight scenic flights. In addition they have offered circle tours—routing passengers over different lines.

Railroads Improve Service.

Railroads point to low fares and air conditioned equipment as a stimulus which has had marked results. Bus companies, while feeling the effects of lower railroad fares, report an excellent season. Lake steamers are carrying 25 to 35 per cent more passengers than last year.

National parks are caring for more visitors than they have had since 1929. Many resort hotels have been booked solidly and have declined further reservations. Retail business has felt the effects of the hegira in marked increases in purchases.

Transportation agencies yesterday were unanimous in reporting heavier business. Park Robbins, general passenger agent of the Wisconsin and Michigan Steamship company, said long haul business has been particularly good.

In New York C. C. Bonter, passenger trafic manager of the Canada Steamship Lines, said reports from tourists and rail officials from New England, the south, and middle west indicate domestic vacation travel is multiplying its activities in all channels of transportation.

Vacation Travel Widespread.

The Pennsylvania railroad reported its northern Michigan lines, which serve a large part of the resort area, is handling 50 to 60 per cent more volume than in 1935. Trafic is heavier on all parts of the line, although officials declined to comment on the effect of the reduced 2 cents a mile fare, which went into effect on the eastern roads June 2.

The New York Central reported gains in vacation travel over 1935 of 30 to 40 per cent and said that increases in the number of all expense tours have been particularly heavy.

A. Cottsworth Jr., passenger trafic manager of the Burlington railroad, said volume of vacation business is the best since 1929. Estes Park is doing a "land office" business, he added, and Yellowstone Park has enjoyed a heavy increase. He said the Zephyrs running between Chicago and Denver have been booked solid since they were inaugurated last May 31, and that on the last two Saturdays extra sections, propelled by steam locomotives, were required. The steam trains arrived 18 minutes behind their streamline Diesel rivals.

The Atchison said passenger business is running 20 per cent above last year, and vacation travel over its lines is 40 to 50 per cent over 1935 and close to 1930 levels. All-expense tours have proved particularly popular.

Bus Lines Report Increase.

While officials of the Greyhound Bus Lines refused to discuss percentages, it was indicated business in the west and southwest is well ahead of 1935, but that eastern volume has been hurt by reduced rail rates. Volume as a whole, however, shows an increase.

Strenuous efforts to boost vacation business of the United Air Lines have resulted in an increase in business of about 25 per cent, according to Harold Crary, vice president. Daylight flights over scenic regions such as Zion National Park, Boulder Dam, and Grand Canyon have been exceedingly popular, he said. A trip to 'Alaska,' enabling passengers to fly from New York to the Pacific coast in one day, spend nine days aboard ship, and another day for return flight, has found exceptional favor, he said.

Transcontinental and Western Air vacation business is the heaviest on record. Circle tours have produced a large volume of new business, officials said yesterday, while an increasing number of persons is using planes to points in New Mexico, which is growing in popularity as a summer resort.

Volume of American Air Lines is well above last year, the company reported, and business has been particularly good to the Dallas, Tex., fair.

PRIVATE LENDERS RETAIN BIG LEAD ON FHA BUSINESS

Interest Under That of U. S. Agency.

Private mortgage lenders continue to make the bulk of such loans throughout the country, despite the activities of the Federal Housing administration, and loans are made at almost 1 per cent less interest than that charged by the government agency, L. A. McLean, president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, announced yesterday. He based his statement on the results of a survey conducted among members of the association in 29 cities.

The average interest rate charged by private mortgage lenders was 5.59 per cent, which was more than ¾ of 1 per cent less than the 6.38 per cent average interest rate of FHA insured loans, McLean said. This latter figure represents the actual cost of FHA loans rather than the 5 per cent figure more often indicated by the FHA.

Rates in Various Districts.

The average interest rate on the private loans was 5.7 per cent in the far west and the mountain states, 5.3 per cent in the middle west, 5.87 per cent in the southern states, and 5.5 per cent in the eastern states, according to the survey.

"It would appear from our reports that FHA will not make more than 10 per cent of the total amount of mortgages this year," McLean asserted. "Our report showed that in 29 principal cities, in all of which the government agency's lenders were very active, FHA accounted for 24.4 per cent of the total in the first six months of this year, while private lenders made 75.6 per cent of the total."

Showing Best in Far West.

For the first six months of this year, according to the association's poll, private lenders have done their largest proportion of business in the far west and mountain states where they averaged 71 per cent of the mortgage loans with FHA making only 20 per cent.

The FHA was shown to be making most progress in the south, where it has accounted for 42 per cent of the mortgages, while private lenders made 46.9 per cent.

COPPER PRICE RISES TO FIVE YEAR PEAK; ZINC ALSO ADVANCES

New York, July 25.—(AP)—The attainment of the highest price in five years for copper, and a general hardening of prices in the nonferrous group, featured metals in the last week. While the copper trade had been discussing the possibility of an advance in the domestic base, the actual upturn came with unexpected suddenness on Tuesday.

Strength of the foreign markets and a general rush of buying hastened the action of leading producers in raising the price ¼ cent to 9¾ cents a pound, establishing the highest level since April, 1931.

Tuesday's sales of 106,101 tons were the largest ever made in one day by the domestic industry. Later, talk developed on the prospects for a further upward move to the 10 cent level, but some quarters did not expect it until October at the earliest.

Zinc moved up 5 points, partly in sympathy with copper. Tin reacted after a rise of 1⅛ cents, finishing the week at a net gain of ¼ cent. Lead, while quotably unchanged, showed firmness.

FARMERS GET LARGER INCOME FROM MILK SALE

New York, July 25.—(AP)—Cash income from milk brought American dairy farmers a total of $683,000,000 in the first six months of 1936, the best return in five years, the Milk Industry Foundation announced today. The figure was about $28,000,000 ahead of the total income from milk in the same period last year, the report said.

"Milk still remains the farmers best source of income," it said, "despite the gradual betterment in all farm prices. The 1936 improvement has been materially aided by the rising tide of consumer buying power in cities, where efficient milk distribution has created wider markets."

The Foundation said that while the drouth in many dairy states has curtailed production, the higher prices being paid for supplies will tend to prevent any decrease in dairy farm income compared with 1935 during the remainder of the year.

STATE BANKS' RESOURCES GAIN THREE BILLIONS

New York, July 25.—[Special.]—State chartered banks of the nation showed an increase in 1935 of three billion dollars in total resources, the American Bankers' association reported today.

The report disclosed that 10,473 state banks had combined resources of $35,724,723,000 on Dec. 31, 1935, against $32,680,203,000 a year earlier. Total deposits last December were $30,526,920,000 against $27,297,959,000 the year before.

"The parallel upward movements of deposits and total invested funds of state supervised banks during the years 1934 and 1935, after declines in 1932 and 1933 are indications of definite steps toward recovery in state banking," the report said.

TWO MORE BANKS NEARLY READY FOR REPAYMENTS

Two more closed Cook county state banks are expected to make repayments to depositors this year, according to figures released yesterday by State Auditor Edward J. Barrett. The banks are: Crawford State Savings bank and the Equitable Trust company. The report shows that the Depositors State bank made a 6 per cent repayment to depositors last quarter.

The Division State bank has paid depositors 100 per cent with remaining assets being placed in the hands of a mortgage company. A similar action is contemplated for the Empire Trust and Savings bank. Complete summaries of the reports of the individual closed banks are published today in the Metropolitan section.

La France Industries Asks Permission to Reorganize

Philadelphia, Pa., July 25.—(AP)—Reorganization of its $5,000,000 business under section 77B of the federal bankruptcy act was asked today by La France Industries, manufacturer of upholstery, rugs, and draperies. In a petition filed in Federal District court the company stated its assets amounted to $4,971,942 against liabilities of $2,042,282, and its difficulties were traceable to insufficient liquid assets to meet current obligations.

This Sounds Like an 'Ad' for Mr. Kennedy's New Book

Hyannis, Mass., July 25.—(AP)—Joseph P. Kennedy, former head of the securities and exchange commission, ignored protests of friends and went ahead today with plans to publish a book on the New Deal, knowing well it "will probably get my head kicked off. If you shove your neck out you're bound to get slapped," he added, "but I can stand it."

BANKERS URGED TO REVEAL REAL DANGER IN FDIC

Tell All to Depositors, Leader Warns.

upon the government's own terms? Why don't we remind them that it wasn't the bankers' money but the peoples' money? Why don't we explain to them our reason for making such loans?

Government Chief Customer.

"In the past we invested in government bonds because we had been accustomed to think of such bonds as the safest of investments. Today we cannot explain our continued investment in such bonds upon any such ground. Because of policies of the administration the ordinary markets for our funds have been lost to us, and the government is today our chief customer."

Bankers must do four things to fulfill obligations to depositors, he said.

"First, we must manage our own banks. Second, it is our duty to manage our banks in the light of experience and to the best of our ability, with a view to safeguarding the funds entrusted to us.

"Third, it is our duty to use our best efforts to insure to our depositors a fair return on the funds entrusted to us, and when such a return is rendered increasingly possible by reason of conditions beyond our immediate control to inform our depositors of such facts in order that they may intelligently act for their own protection.

Duty to Return Sound Dollar.

"Fourth, it is our duty to do everything in our power to make it possible for us to return to our depositors when demanded by them dollars not depreciated by government fiat or by excessive government borrowing."

Of this current condition in economics and politics he said:

"Fundamentally, this country is sound. Our troubles are self-made. We are simply off balance. We are ignoring the balances set up by the constitution. We are ignoring the balance that comes from the free interplay of ideas and independent action in business. We are substituting for all this the ideas of a small group of men to whom are entrusted the powers heretofore exercised by the many."

FOREIGN MONEYS RALLY; SPANISH UNIT RECOVERS

Leading foreign currencies yesterday reversed the downward trend against the dollar which had prevailed most of the week on uneasiness over the Spanish revolt. Banking quarters in New York reported short covering for over the week-end as aiding the upward movement in European moneys, with the usual Saturday closing of exchanges in Paris also a factor.

The Spanish peseta closed higher against the dollar in New York, gaining 1 point to 13.71 cents. French francs improved ½ point to 6.61½ cents, reducing the dollar to 100.27 cents against francs from 100.35 cents Friday.

Dutch guilders rose 7 points to 68.02 cents; Swiss francs, 2 points to 32.72 cents; Belgian belgas, ½ point to 16.87½ cents, and German marks, 1 point to 40.27 cents. The British pound gained 5-16 cents to close at $5.02 3-16. Canadian dollars were unchanged at parity.

Leading banks suddenly reduced quotations on the German travel mark by 2¼ cents. The travel mark, one of the several "blocked" marks, has been quoted at 26¼ cents. The price was reduced to 24 cents yesterday.

The United States yesterday gained $2,250,000 in gold through the release of metal held under earmark for foreign account.

JUNE'S BUILDING PERMITS NEARLY DOUBLE YEAR AGO

Total for U. S. Also Shows Sharp Gain Over May.

Building activity in June, as measured by the value of permits issued, was 34 per cent above May and 97 per cent above a year ago, according to a report issued yesterday by the bureau of labor statistics.

The gain over May was especially significant, the bureau said, since in five of the last seven years building permit valuations have been lower in June than in May. The bureau reported that the increase in June, this year, was widespread, with eight of the nine geographical divisions showing gains. The increase in residential building was especially pronounced.

Residential Building Leads.

Reports from 1,362 cities showed an increase of 45 per cent in the value of residential buildings, an increase of 41 per cent in the value of nonresidential buildings, and a gain of 7 per cent in the value of additions, alterations, and repairs to existing structures.

Compared with a year ago, June building activity showed an even more pronounced increase. According to the bureau, the value of residential buildings, as measured by permits issued, showed a gain of $39,800,000, or 142 per cent. Indicated expenditures for new non-residential buildings increased $21,000,000, or 81 per cent, and the permit valuation of additions, alterations, and repairs increased more than $9,000,000, or 52 per cent.

Nearly Double Year Ago.

The increase in the value of all construction in June amounted to approximately $71,000,000, or 97 per cent over the corresponding month of 1935.

During the first six months of 1936 permits were issued for buildings valued at nearly 610 million dollars, an increase of 76 per cent over the corresponding period of 1935. For the period the value of new residential buildings increased 121 per cent, for new nonresidential buildings, 69 per cent, and for additions, alterations and repairs, 34 per cent.

Permits issued in Chicago during June were for factory buildings to cost more than $500,000 and for store buildings to cost more than $500,000.

USE OF CHECKS INDICATES MORE ACTIVE BUSINESS

An increase in business activity in the seventh federal reserve district—the Chicago area—was indicated for the week ended July 22 in weekly banking statistics issued yesterday.

Debits to individual deposit account, the bulk of which represent business transacted by check, amounted to $1,163,229,000, compared with $1,099,485,000 a week earlier, and $949,486,000 in the corresponding period of 1935.

For the nation as a whole debits totaled $8,732,402,000 for the week, compared with $8,361,984,000 a week earlier and $7,456,363,000 in the same period of last year.

In Chicago debits aggregated $663,272,000, compared with $577,756,000 a year ago.

Bank clearings by members of the Chicago Clearing House association in the week ended yesterday totaled $282,000,000, against $309,200,000 in the preceding week, and $237,000,000 in the same week last year.

250 CONTRACTORS TAKE TAX FIGHT TO HIGH COURT

Springfield, Ill., July 25.—(AP)—Another test of the department of finance's interpretation of the state sales tax was appealed to the Illinois Supreme court today, the fourth major case to be submitted this year.

The appellants in the new case are more than 250 building contractors who lost their Cook county Circuit court attempt to enjoin the state from collecting the 3 per cent tax on building materials. The case was heard in the lower court by Judge Walter La Buy.

The Circuit judge, however, did enjoin the state temporarily from fixing a penalty against contractors who paid the levy into escrow pending a high court appeal. He also held that where a contractor failed to break down his revenue into labor and materials he must pay the tax on the entire sum.

CATTLE ADVANCE AS HEAT WANES AND RAINS COME

Meat Demand Is Better; Hogs and Lambs Rise.

Relief from the intense heat wave, rains in some sections of the country, improved consumer demand, and the threat of federal agents to enter the cattle trade to support prices, formed a combination of factors that raised live stock and meat prices last week despite increased receipts of all species at the Chicago stock yards.

Some sharp price increases were scored in cattle. The steer averages for the six days at $8.25 equaled the highest weekly average since the week ended April 25, showing 40 cents gain over the previous week. Steers and yearlings closed steady to 25 cents higher than a week ago. The best of the weighty cattle made the least improvement, although most steers and yearlings are selling 75 cents above the low spot less than two weeks ago.

Butcher Stock Advances.

Butcher stock rose 25 to 50 cents, with the biggest gains in the grassy hefers. Canners and cutters recovered 25 cents of the recent losses. A sharp rise in calves elevated vealers $1 to $1.25 in six days, with heavy kinds closing 50 cents above a week ago. Farmers paid 15 to 25 cents higher prices for replacement cattle.

With the exception of the heavy drouth run of three weeks ago, when 50,484 cattle arrived at Chicago, last week's total at 45,600 stands largest of the year, but a much larger percentage of the supply consisted of good longfed beef steers. The better quality accounted for some of the rise in the week's steer average. Top steers reached $10, equaling the highest mark since late in April, as compared with a peak of $9.65 for the previous week. Most sales ranged from $7.50 to $8.85.

Hogs Rise; Receipts Larger.

Hog receipts at Chicago for the week were second largest since May, but with demand broad on both local and shipping account prices finished mostly 10 to 20 cents above a week ago, the average for the six days at $9.75 being highest in three weeks.

A rise of $1 to $2.50 in wholesale markets for fresh pork loins stimulated buying by smaller local interests, and shippers ran into a good deal of competition in the top grades.

The sharp rise in calves eased pressure on the trade for lambs and the latter advanced 50 cents to $1 in the last six days, the week's average at $10.05 showing a gain of 65 cents. Sorted natives reached $10.75, with westerns at $10.50, top yearlings at $9, and old ewes at $4.25. Feeding lambs sold downwards from $8.15.

Not sufficient live stock arrived yesterday to warrant a change in quotations. Scattered bunches of hogs were bid downwards from $10.20, but were held over for Monday's trade.

Strength in Liverpool Helps Boost World's Wheat Prices

Persistent strength in the Liverpool wheat market, where both the cash article and futures sold at new high levels for the season during the last week, has helped to boost the world price level, which is now at the highest since the 1929-'30 season. Yesterday the price of wheat from various countries in the English market was above $1 per bushel, compared with an average of 80 cents during the 1934-'35 crop year, 69 cents in 193-'34, and 59 cents in 1932-'33, when the average price was the lowest in about 300 years.

With the exception of Winnipeg, wheat futures in all the world's leading markets yesterday were above the dollar level. July wheat in Liverpool closed at $1.04⅝ per bushel. Continued wet weather in the United Kingdom and prospects of small world shipments were factors in the rise. Exports of wheat from Argentina and Australia last week aggregated 2,291,000 bushels, of which only 270,000 bushels went to Europe and 2,016,000 bushels to non-European countries.

Northern Iowa, which has produced the heaviest yields of corn in the state in past years, cannot raise much more than 50 per cent of a crop this season even with the best of weather conditions from now on, according to H. C. Donovan, crop expert, in a report to Thomson & McKinnon from Dubuque. The good condition in the eastern part of that section is more than offset, he said, by the near failure of the crop in the west.

The European rye crop this season is estimated by Broomhall, a leading English authority, at 910,000,000 bushels, compared with 859,000,000 bushels last year and a five year average of 892,000,000 bushels.

Cash oats sold in the Chicago market yesterday at equal to about $24 per ton, which according to a comparison with the price of other grains and feeds made by Row Bell of Lamson Brothers & Co., makes them by far the cheapest feed available.

No. 1 northern spring wheat in the Winnipeg market was quoted yesterday at ½ cent per bushel over the July future, the largest premium of the season.

JULY COTTON SPURTS $6.75 A BALE DUE TO SQUEEZE, BUT REACTS

July cotton soared equal to $6.75 per bale in New Orleans yesterday as the result of frantic efforts on the part of shorts to cover sales made at lower prices. Little spot cotton, it was reported, was available for delivery purposes in the southern market, and operators who sold futures in expectations of being able to deliver the actual article were forced to go into the "ring" and buy back their contracts. A price of 14 cents per pound was established at the opening, the highest for a future contract since August, 1934.

A decline almost as sensational as had been the advance followed, with the close at the bottom at 12.83 cents per pound, showing a net gain of 18 points, equal to 90 cents per bale. Trading in the July delivery ceased yesterday.

Distant deliveries of cotton in American markets advanced sharply early in sympathy with Liverpool and on aggressive buying by professionals. The close was at net gains of 10 to 16 points, or 50 to 80 cents per bale. [A point is equal to 1-100 cents per pound or 5 cents per bale.] Heavy damage was reported to the Oklahoma crop as the result of drouth and intense heat.

Spot cotton closed 10 to 15 points higher, with New Orleans at 13.05 cents, Galveston 12.95 cents, Houston 13 cents, and New York at 13.30 cents per pound. Prices follow:

New York, July 25.—Despite the usual week-end evening up operations and profit taking, bond prices maintained a fairly even course in today's session on the New York stock exchange.

Volume of trading was about the same as that of last Saturday, amounting to $4,452,000, par value, for the two hour session, compared wth $4,521,000 a week ago.

Trading interest centered in a group of pivotal issues and utility liens. With few exceptions fluctuations in the corporate division were fractional and closing prices represented a fairly even sprinkling of gains and losses.

Federal Farm Bonds Higher.

A bloc of $25,000 of Federal Farm Mortgage 2¾s sold at 102.19, a gain of 9-32s from Friday's close. Treasury 2¾s of 1948 rose 5-32ds on a single sale totaling $19,000 par value. Elsewhere in the federal list activity was extremely dull and closing quotations were practically unchanged.

In the corporate list Allis-Chalmers 4s advanced 1½ points, New York Railways 6s gained 2⅜, and Studebaker 6s climbed 2⅛ points. Gains were also chalked up by such issues as St. Paul 5s, International Telephone 4½s, Maine Central 6s, Republic Steel 4½s, Alleghany 5s, Illinois Central 4¾s, and Third Avenue adjustment 5s.

Other Issues Show Declines.

Lower prices were recorded for Baltimore and Ohio 4½s, Chesapeake corporation collateral 5s, Gould Coupler 6s, American and Foreign Power 5s, International Hydro Electric 6s, and Missouri Pacific 5s.

In the foreign division narrow price changes were the rule. Rome 6½s encountered a modest amount of activity but finished unchanged for the day. Uruguay 6s advanced a small fraction.

New Industries.

Many men and women seeking a better return on their money than that offered on better grade securities of well known corporations are canvassing the possibilities of newer industries.

American business history presents a record of unparalleled initiative, a succession of new products to make life more comfortable. Business booms have been generated by this fertility of the American brain.

Companies active in air conditioning or development of television appear to attract most interest of those looking for "comers." Distillers and brewery concerns also have been catching the eye of the speculatively inclined.

Undoubtedly there is a number of companies in these and other groups which will be highly successful. Profits will be reflected in dividends and sharply increased value of stocks.

On the other hand, the investing public will do well to recall what has happened to some of the most popular radio and other stocks of a few years ago. Selections must be made with utmost care.

A majority of television companies probably will fizzle. Only a small group of breweries is apt to prove highly profitable.

Tropical temperatures in recent weeks have served to focus attention on air conditioning. Those employed in air conditioned offices are envied. The housewife is intensely interested in the prospects for air conditioning in the home.

The public is definitly receptive, but it is not convinced that the industry has solved enough of its problems to make purchase attractive yet.

Price, of course, is a compelling factor. The average person recalls that it used to be a cheap automobile that cost as little as $1,500. People have seen the strides made by the automobile and other industries in mass production. They expect the same drastic cutting of costs and improvement of product in the air conditioning field.

Whatever the new industry may be, the investor will do well to remember that a new company usually is at a tremendous disadvantage when pitted against established concerns with large resources. Only those with proper financial backing, capable management, and sound engineering stafs will survive the competition which any promising new field develops.

BOY GANGS FIND IT PAYS TO PLAY AT DIVISION 'Y'

Worn Steps Testify to Building's Use.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

When marble slabs were laid for entrance steps to the then new Division Street Y. M. C. A. 26 years ago they were fully an inch and a half thick. Today, especially along the west rail of the steps, the slabs are scarcely an inch in thickness with the whole length undulant.

For good reason!

To date, the feet of more than 11 million boys and men—mostly boys—have left indelible evidence of their passing in the hard stone. And, according to Dr. Francis S. Thornton, Logan Square physician, who is president of the Division "Y," the grinding continues at an accelerating pace under a half million pairs of feet or more each year.

Good or Bad Gangs.

But what is more interesting, this grinding is being done more and more by young gangsters from Goose island, Marshfield avenue and 50 or more other near northwest side underprivileged neighborhoods. Gangs, according to James M. Semple, boys' work director, are not compiled to be bad. But he hastened to add that the difference generally between a good gang and a bad one is the Division Y. M. C. A., or some similar welfare institution which has gained the confidence of bands of boys, 12 years old or older, who are tied together by bonds of frequent hunger, trouble, or downright desperation.

"We work with these 'natural groups,'" said Mr. Semple. "After we gain their confidence, we give them a counsellor and staf adviser, but we make no attempt to alter the makeup of the group."

Mr. Semple, who came up through Division "Y" when most of its work was with privileged groups—to the neglect, he said, of close up gang problems of its area—is of ample frame; heroic in stature, at least to the 1,700 gangland boys under his leadership.

Boys Find a Leader.

Semple, it was, according to Richard A. Maske, general secretary at Division, who with his superb physique and manner of approach which disarmed suspicion, was able to gather in and give constructive activity to scores of gangs which formerly had scurried like rabbits about alleys, vacant lots and empty buildings and were generally up to no good thing.

In response to the question of the kinds of activities going on under his direction, Mr. Semple bade the inquirer to look about.

First was the fellowship room. There the Marshfield Dodger junior gang, composed of about 15 Polish lads, was preparing for camp "sings." [They go next month to Division's well equipped Camp Channing, near Pullman, Mich.]

Gangs Within Gangs.

It should be explained that there are three Marshfield Dodger gangs. There is the Marshfield Dodger gang; the Marshfield Dodger gang, senior, and the hero worshiping juniors, then at song. Many gangs, Mr. Semple said, are like that—not just one but in several sizes.

In the court or open air gymnasium in the building's "well," a tight game of softball was in progress between the well known Marshfield Raiders, of Marshfield avenue, and the Cougar Junior gang of Emma street. The Raiders were winning at the end of the sixth. But the Cougars, in losing, take comfort in the fact that they may come back later, for Thursday's game was only one of a carefully developed league-like schedule with a championship possible even yet. There are a total of 62 teams competing in seven sports under Mr. Semple's direction. Boxing begins with an "under 35 pound class," with Casmir Kraviec, 1120 Marshfield avenue, the champion of that division.

When softball or other sports is over for each of the successive pairs of competing teams throughout the day there is a swim in the pool. But each must bathe before entering the large tank and undergo a quick but efficient physical examination.

Handicrafts for All.

After the swim there is plenty more to do. For instance, the Raider gang might go to soap carving and the Cougars to shop work. During the month of June, 107 organized groups, composed of 1,788 boys, held 429 sports contests or other activity sessions covering a period of 6,091 program hours.

Religious sectarianism is entirely absent from Division's work. As evidence of this, at a recent dinner at Division, the following persons were at the speakers' table: Rabbi Benjamin Birnbaum; the Rt. Rev. Bishop Leonty of the Russian Orthodox diocese of Chicago; the late Rt. Rev. Bishop Mareary of the Serbian Orthodox diocese; the Rev. Irving L. Schweitzer of Grace Evangelical church; Dr. Thornton, a leading Methodist layman; Marion Kudlick, Catholic layman; the Rev. Father Klostka of St. Hedwig's Catholic church; Chief Sheenou of the Winnebago Indian tribe; the Rev. John S. Higgins, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Advent, and the Rev. Charles S. Venable of Wicker Park Lutheran church.

Crystal Lake Centennial to Open Aug. 6

In costumes of the day when farmers, counterfeiters, preachers, and early railroad builders all had a share in running the town, citizens of Crystal Lake will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the founding of their city, Aug. 6 to 9. The festival will be the third in McHenry communities, others having been held in Hebron, ending today, and in McHenry, closing next Sunday.

Tracing the growth of the community, the Crystal Lake historical pageant will open with the arrival of Berman Crandall, original settler who reached Crystal Lake in February, 1836. Stages in the history of other parts of the county also will be portrayed.

Centering on two historical parades, the opening and closing dates, the celebration will include dramatic presentations Aug. 6, 7, and 8 on the lighted grounds of the Crystal Lake Community High school and a concert by the Choral society in the park.

Oxen to Lead Parade.

The opening day parade will be led by a team of white oxen, owned by A. L. Eustace of Crystal Lake, drawing a covered wagon, replica of Berman Crandall's pioneer outfit, past the site of the Crandall cabin.

The line of march will proceed over part of Virginia avenue which follows the original trail first used by Indians. The trail later was used by a band of Virginians who came into McHenry county before it was organized and settled in a little community north of Ridgefield which has since disappeared. It was in honor of Christopher Walkup, leader of the southerners from the old dominion, that the street was named.

On this same thoroughfare also stood the first inn. Established by Lyman Kind in 1840, it served as a stopping place for cross country stage coaches. During the civil war the building was known as the Bradley house and was a center of recruiting drives. In 1870 it became the Ashton house, renowned summer hotel.

Old Time Vehicles.

John M. Roberts will lead the section of the parade devoted to old time vehicles. A high wheel bicycle and the first piece of fire fighting apparatus used in the city, piloted by Paul Bertram, first fire chief, and later state marshal, will be features of this section. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other fraternal organizations will march.

An old time engine and a single car, property of the Chicago and North Western railroad, will be used on this day. Citizens will be given rides on this train, now powered by a gasoline motor.

The pioneer railroad equipment will recall strenuous efforts made by settlers in 1855 to bring the railroad along Virginia avenue. Much to the disappointment of many, the company chose a route which ran through the west end of Nunda township nearby. Eventually Nunda and Crystal Lake were consolidated, though the municipality still has two business districts and two centers of church and community life.

Early Railroad Stalemate.

Two railroads later sought to pass through the city limits occasioning another item of historical interest which will be relived. Construction gangs of both companies reached the crossing point simultaneously and work came to a standstill.

For days the courts were unable to decide which group had the right to proceed until one night engineers of one company tunneled under the crossing and continued laying tracks on toward Lake Geneva, Wis. This move settled the issue and today the same crossing exists though both roads are the property of a third company.

Nunda township was named for Nunda, N. Y., named so after a tribe of Indians living in that territory. Col. William Huffman, Col. G. H. Palmer, and others including the Bryant and Joselyn families migrated from New York to Nunda, claiming the land as bounty on military warrants.

Monument to Founders.

A monument to the memory of the intrepid founders of Crystal Lake and Nunda in Chrystal Lake park will be unveiled following the opening parade.

An official song, "Dear Crystal Lake, We Hail Thee," by Mrs. Alice W. Lucas, has been adopted by the committee headed by A. G. Wilmington, member of the city council and acting mayor.

Mrs. F. L. Alford is chairman of the casting committee and George Burmeister has charge of the properties. Other officers of the general committee are William Fitzgerald, vice chairman; Harry C. Shales, secretary; A. H. Henderson Jr., treasurer, and Henry L. Cowlin.

FIFTY MAYFAIR CHILDREN GIVE ICE FUND SHOW

Fifty children of the Mayfair community held their second annual benefit for THE TRIBUNE free ice fund recently in the Mayfair Presbyterian church, Ainslie and Kostner. The benefit, which netted $53.50 for the ice fund, consisted of an hour of amateur performance and a patriotic pageant, "Our Flag." More than 500 tickets, at five and ten cents, were sold by the energetic young Mayfairians.

SEEKING SPEEDBOAT THRILLS ON FOX RIVER

They're off for a motorboat ride on the Fox river and soon the spacious quarters of the newly organized Elgin Marine club will be but a speck on the river bank to the northward. These members of Elgin's smart set know the thrills of motorboating—wind rushing against their faces, the boat cutting through the water to send upward a misty spray that becomes a quivering rainbow against the blue of the river. Their boat need not wait for a lazy river current. Speed belongs to this sport and rollicking laughter is the accompaniment. Where the river widens to become almost a lake motorboating, water carnivals, and surfboard riding will make up the August program. Club members ready to leave the Elgin Marine station are, from left to right, Miss Evelyn Tarson, John Wegman Jr., Julian Gromer, Miss Lillian Rahn, and Miss Welma Gromer.

ST. CELESTINE'S PARISH TO OPEN FESTIVAL TODAY

5 Night Event to Aid School Funds.

The riotous grotesquery and colorful carnival spirit that pervades the Mardi gras will give the tone, if plans are fulfilled, in the gala festival which will be held for five consecutive nights beginning today and closing Thursday on the St. Celestine church grounds, 76th court and Wellington avenue, Elmwood Park.

The event has been designed to raise funds for partly financing the new parochial grammar school for children of Elmwood Park and Belmont Heights. The construction of the school will begin in the fall.

Special Event Each Night.

Everything that will add to a carnival spirit has been planned by the school fund committee. There will be red and green balloons bobbing above the crowd and barkers crying their edible wares in guttural tones above the laughter of the merrymakers. There will be Punch and Judy theaters and entertainment booths.

Each evening the carnival will honor some person or organization or will offer some special feature. Tonight will be dedicated to the visiting friends of the parish. Tomorrow will be Mardi gras night and prizes will be given for the most comic costume.

Tuesday night will be dedicated to the athletic activities of the village and will offer a program stressing athletics. The Rev. Francis Shea, pastor of the church, will be honored on Wednesday evening and the last evening, Thursday, is surprise night.

OUR TOWN

Paragraphs About Some Folks You Know.

THE victim of wanderlust finds a strange fascination in the figure —33,632. It is the total number of miles traveled by Mrs. F. P. Sullivan, 1620 Chase avenue, and her pretty daughter, Mary Alice, when recently they cruised around the world on the Empress of Britain.

Their itinerary is a litany of romantic names — Madeira, Durban, Bombay, Penang, Singapore, Semarang, Chinwangtao, Peppu, Kobe, Hilo —that conjures up pictures of exotic southern islands; of bullock carts and rickshas; Zulu huts and palm trees; of strings of brown Mongolian camels padding into Peiping laden with Siberian furs; of jade and jeweled temples; of the sacred yellow Ganges, the burning vats, the Taj Mahal and its murmuring cypresses; of Tokio tinkling with bells—a fairyland of cherry bloom on Easter morning.

Charles Ludlow, who left Evanston four months ago, will return on the Queen Mary this week. He writes from London, "I've seen Italy, France, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium, and England, and Europe's great, but there's no place like home!" Loyal Charles further reassures us with "A Thespian I may be, but I'm not returning with an English accent."

Two birthday anniversaries recently noted by Our Town were Mrs. Sophie Freudenberg's and Solomon Segal's. Mrs. Freudenberg, whose home is in Grand Rapids, has attained her 84th year. She returned to Chicago, which was her home for 64 years, and her many old friends to celebrate her birthday at an open house, given by her daughter, Mrs. Charles Gottschalk, 4717 North Knox avenue. Mr. Segal's daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Yaseen, 6101 Sheridan road, gave a dinner at the Sovereign hotel to fête him on his 72d anniversary.

REPORT SHOWS DEPOSITORSMAY GET $250,000

Receiver Gives Out Quarterly Report.

Prospects that depositors in five closed north and northwest side state banks will receive repayments of approximately $250,000 before January were indicated in figures issued by State Auditor Edward J. Barrett. They were based on the second quarterly statement of the late William L. O'Connell, who was receiver for 42 closed Cook county state banks at the time of his death Friday. Seventeen north and northwest side banks are included in the first section of the report published today.

Banks which may make repayments this quarter are: the Arlington Heights State bank, Builders and Merchants Bank and Trust company, Citizens State Bank of Glencoe, Columbia State Savings bank, and the Cragin State bank.

Armitage Bank Refund.

Early in the last quarter the Armitage State bank made an additional 5 per cent repayment to depositors of $17,000. Three north and northwest side closed banks are tied up at the present time by reorganization plans. They are the Cosmopolitan State bank, the Division State bank and the Empire Trust and Savings bank.

Mr. O'Connell pointed out that assets in the closed banks are gradually decreasing to slow moving real estate properties. He explained the quarterly receipts of any particular bank are no longer indicative of that bank's ability to pay. "A bank may collect only $500 one quarter and the next quarter the receiver may complete a real estate deal under negotiation for some time and collect $10,000 or $20,000," he explained.

Summaries of Report.

Summaries of the report of individual banks, together with the best available estimates of the ultimate possible repayments to depositors are given below. All figures apply to the full period of receivership unless otherwise specified.

Arlington Heights State bank—Total receipts, $225,262; paid on prior claims, $118,054; paid depositors, $34,388 or 10 per cent. Costs: receivers, $6,475; legal, $5,132; clerical, $21,646; interest, $8,082; advanced to protect assets, $19,923, of which $14,249 has been refunded. Cash on hand applicable to repayments was increased by $6,511 during the quarter, reaching a total of $8,686. Report indicates a 5 per cent payment will be made before long, approximately $17,000 being needed for 5 per cent. Bank may ultimately pay 30 per cent to depositors.

Armitage State bank—Receipts, $204,323; with $33,957 collected last quarter. Paid on prior claims, $95,653; paid depositors, $17,073, or 5 per cent, made last quarter. Costs: receivers, $4,003; legal, $13,976; clerical, $28,159; interest, $630; advanced to protect assets, $32,559 with $22,478 refunded. With several unadjudicated claims remaining in this former Bain bank, no more than 5 to 10 per cent in repayments are ultimately expected for depositors.

Builders and Merchants Bank & Trust company—Receipts, $2,838,338 with $102,866 collected last quarter. Paid on prior claims, $958,294 and paid to depositors, $1,006,445 or 35 per cent. Costs: receivers, $34,073; legal, $123,398; clerical, $142,501; interest, $1,871; advanced to protect assets, $431,375 with $404,617 refunded to the bank. Liquidation is reported good at this bank and $20,000 more is needed for an additional 5 per cent repayment, expected this quarter or early in the next. Receiver has on hand, available for repayments, $123,383.

Chicago Bank of Commerce—Receipts, $3,365,124, with $189,036 collected last quarter. Paid on prior claims, $768,866 and paid to depositors, $647,152 or 15 per cent. Costs: receivers, $22,027; legal, $277,549; clerical, $271,911; interest, $5,739; advanced to protect assets, $1,044,376, of which $651,042 has been refunded to the bank. Many unadjudicated claims made estimates of ultimate liquidation value of this bank impossible.

Citizens State Bank of Chicago—Receipts, $2,100,110; paid on prior claims, $1,126,341. Costs: receivers, $10,396; legal, $41,500; clerical, $98,692; interest, $132,227; advanced to protect assets, $640,958, of which $371,907 has been refunded. The bank still owes approximately $550,000 to the Reconstruction Finance corporation and any repayments to depositors will be small, probably not more than 5 or 10 per cent eventually.

CITIZENS STATE BANK OF GLENCOE—Receipts, $64,825; paid on prior claims, $11,808; paid depositors, $27,350 or 37 per cent. Costs: Receivers, $1,627; legal, $4,864; clerical, $8,923; interest, $11.43; advanced to protect assets, $1,462, with $1,410 refunded. Cash available for repayments, $7,163, indicating possible additional 5 per cent repayment this quarter and may pay 10 per cent before the close of the year.

CITY STATE BANK OF CHICAGO—Receipts, $1,963,165, with only $432 collected last quarter. Paid on prior claims, $729,005; paid depositors, $915,002 or 32 per cent. Costs: Receivers, $50,000; legal, $69,001; clerical, $82,857; interest, $206; advanced to protect assets, $80,898. Bank is now in the process of being turned over from the receivership of the Chicago Title and Trust company to William L. O'Connell. No estimates of additional repayments available at this time.

COLUMBIA STATE SAVINGS BANK—Receipts, $763,568; paid on prior claims, $124,212; paid depositors, $372,665 or 30 per cent. Costs: Receivers, $16,132; legal, $29,634; clerical, $67,170; interest, $334; advanced to protect assets, $98,014 with $94,-

WORK, NOT FAME, FOR MEN BEHIND THE MAESTROS!

Many a Batoneer Owes It All to His Stand In.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Watching Ted Fio-Rito reherse his orchestra for that Friday night show which features Clara, Lu 'n' Em in addition to his own refreshing music, your reporter observed that Ted never calls on a henchman to help him out in directing the band.

Ted directs his own orchestra even when he is doing a rippling bit on the keyboard. But his case is exceptional. Like the screen stars most band leaders have "stand ins." But unlike those of the screen stars these stand-ins often are as important as the bosses who bag most of the publicity.

Take the case of Ben Bernie. For years Mickey Garlock has been running the lads through rehersals. Many a night Mickey waves the stick while Ben is out gabbing with the customers or upstairs playing bridge with Sophie Tucker.

Heidt Calls on Dreiske.

If you have seen Horace Heidt's Brigadiers put on a show you know that Jerry Bowne and Horace do a lot of spoofing over who shall run the band. But during commercial programs Horace turns over the command of the brigade to Harold Dreiske, his chief arranger, while the boss takes his place at the microphone and does the talking.

Jack Hylton lets Billy Ternent run his orchestra most of the time, particularly when they are on the air with their sponsored shows. Ternent, his ace arranger, is a talented fellow, a master of almost every instrument in the orchestra.

At the Drake Ternent sometimes turned over the baton to Billy Scott, the American trumpeter, who is an orchestra leader himself.

Carmen Drills the Band.

Radio fans know Carmen Lombardo as Brother Guy's chief vocalist. He also seems to run the band during rehersals. He directs the men by flapping his elbows up and down since his hands are busy with the saxophone. Guy sits on the studio floor and listens, or lends an ear from the control room to see how it sounds via the loud-speaker.

Fred Culley, Fred Waring's violinist, directs the orchestra during the stumbling periods of rehersals. Then Waring takes the stick and puts on the polish.

While Henry Busse was vacationing at Lake Geneva lately Abe Hill was pinch-waving for him at the Chez Paree. Ben Pollack calls in Al Beller occasionally.

Paul Whiteman relies a lot on Adolph Deutsch, his chief arranger. Deutsch conducted the Whiteman band last winter on the Jumbo series. Roy Bargy, pianist, also is an understudy. Sometimes young Matt Malineck, one of his players, takes charge of the band at night club appearances.

Lennie Hayton, like Fio-Rito, insists on leading his crew from the piano. Nevertheless his first violinist Harry Bluestone spends many an hour drilling the orchestra in preliminary rehersals.

Kemp Calls on Dowell.

Hal Kemp is almost always out in front of his orchestra but during necessary absences he turns the direction over to Saxy Dowell, featured saxophonist who also does some of the vocal numbers.

Leo Reisman relies on Ray Block, his arranger, for relief, and Peter van Steeden calls on Vic Costello, pianist arranger. Josef Stopak, violinist, sometimes conducts Frank Black's orchestra.

Krueger in Place of Vallee.

Rudy Vallee is relieved now and then by Benny Krueger, sometime Chicago saxophonist and band leader. Richard Himber has Colman Cass, his librarian, give him a hand occasionally. Dave Rubinoff uses Elias Breskin, former concert master of the Minneapolis Symphony.

Ted Weems turns over the baton to his brother Art from time to time, and Ken Churchill, arranger, sometimes handles the crew in rehersals. Danny Lieberfeld, pianist, is Gus Haenschen's right hand man. Rosario Bourdon puts his trust in George Laendner, librarian, and Teddy Powell is Abe Lyman's associate conductor.

Gusikoff for Kostelanetz.

When he wants to hear what his men sound like Andre Kostelanetz often turns the band over to Michel Gusikoff, violinist and concert master. Gusikoff has played with many great symphony orchestras, including the famous New York Philharmonic. Harry Hoffman, another Kostelanetz violinist, is also called on occasionally.

Georgie Stoll, who used to run an orchestra for Bing Crosby's show, is now the associate conductor for Nat Shilkret and in that capacity is sometimes to be found leading the band on the new CBS Caravan series.

Tom Coakley, who used to be the boss of his band, now runs it from his law office, and Carl Ravazza now has charge of it and it now is called the Ravazza band.

Carl Hoff once was an arranger and assistant conductor for Vincent Lopez. Now his name is bigger in radio as leader of the Hit Parade band than that of Lopez. Hoff's relief man is Irving Praeger, violinist.

Sophie Tucker had a band here recently which Jack Fulton Jr. directed for her. Now she is using Leonard Keller, who until lately had a crew of his own.

And so it goes. Some get their names in bright lights while their stooges get a lot of hard work.

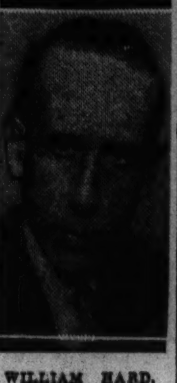
HARD PICKED TO SPEAK FOR G.O.P. 5 TIMES A WEEK

Nightly Hour of Comment Starts Tomorrow.



WILLIAM HARD.

Starting tomorrow evening William Hard, nationally known radio commentator and political writer, will present 15 minute broadcasts five nights a week under the sponsorship of the Republican National committee over WENR and the NBC coast to coast network. This represents the opening gun in the Republican radio campaign to elect Gov. Alfred M. Landon President. The broadcasts will be aired in the middle west from 9:15 to 9:30 p. m. Monday through Friday, except Wednesday, when the hour will be 8:45.

As tentatively outlined these broadcasts will include certain periods in which Mr. Hard will do all the commenting and at other times he will have guest speakers.

A Free Rein for Hard.

The programs will be turned over to Mr. Hard without reservation, the G. O. P. radio division explained. No strings have been placed on him and no instructions are to be given.

Mr. Hard will be given a free rein to interpret the issues of the campaign and the candidates as he sees them.

Knox Notification Thursday.

The vice presidential notification and acceptance address of Frank Knox will be broadcast over W-G-N-Mutual and other networks from 9 to 10 next Thursday evening, from Chicago Stadium. This rally is in the charge of the Illinois Citizens committee with Chauncey McCormick as chairman.

John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican committee, will introduce Senator Frederick Steiwer of Oregon who will make the notification address. Quin Ryan will be commentator for the Mutual system's broadcast.

FUTURITY TO BE AIRED SATURDAY OVER MBS NET

The Arlington Futurity, one of the nation's richest horse races for 2 year olds, will be broadcast over W-G-N and the Mutual network at 5 p. m. Saturday from the roof of the famous grandstand. Norris Royden, one of the country's foremost racing writers and callers, will describe the race, and Pierre Andre, veteran announcer and commentator, will present the color picture before and after the race. The Arlington Handicap, another outstanding event, will be broadcast for Mutual at 4:30 o'clock, but will have no Chicago outlet.

WEEMS TO AIR PROGRAM TODAY FROM CLEVELAND

Ted Weems and his orchestra, heard over W-G-N and Mutual at 12:30 p. m. Sundays, will broadcast today's show from the new auditorium on the grounds of the Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland, O. It will be the first time that Weems has presented his Mutual commercial before an audience, and a crowd of around 6,000 is expected to witness the broadcast. Jack Pearce, W-G-N engineer, is in Cleveland to handle the show.

Story of Johannes Kepler on Titans Series Today

The story of Johannes Kepler, sixteenth century astronomer who discovered the cause of ocean tides, will be dramatized at 7 p. m. today over W-G-N and Mutual nework in the University broadcasting council's "Titans of Science." Kepler, who was a friend of both Galileo and Tycho Brahe, discovered several of the most noted laws in mathematical astronomy which are still used by modern astronomers in their studies of heavenly bodies.

Iturbi Again to Direct Philharmonic Saturday

José Iturbi will direct the New York Philharmonic orchestra during their weekly broadcast over W-G-N and the Mutual Broadcasting system at 8:15 next Saturday night. Brahm's "Symphony No. 3," "The Steppes of Central Asia," a colorful fantasy by Borodin, and the "Fire Bird Suite," by Stravinsky, will make up the portion of the program which will be heard over W-G-N.

KING OF ENGLAND ON W-G-N TODAY FROM VIMY RIDGE

Lebrus Also to Speak This Morning.

The address of King Edward VIII. of Great Britain at the unveiling of the Canadian national war memorial at Vimy Ridge, France, will be brought to W-G-N listeners this morning through coöperation of the Mutual system and the Canadian radio commission.

In order to carry this trans-Atlantic pickup, which also will feature addresses by President Lebrun of France and Premier King of Canada, W-G-N will go on the air at 8:13 a. m., three-quarters of an hours early.

This will be the second time King Edward's voice has been relayed to America since he became king.

Four more band concerts will be presented over W-G-N-Mutual from the Grant park bandshell this week. All of the concerts will be broadcast for thirty minutes starting at 8:30 o'clock. Tomorrow night Max Bendix will present his band, with Berenice Taylor, radio and concert soprano, as soloist. Tuesday the band directed by Glen Cliff Bainum will be heard, with Jeanette Vander Velpen as vocalist.

The Chicago Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Robert Sanders, will be heard on Wednesday. On Thursday the Veterans of Foreign Wars band, directed by Col. Armin F. Hand, with Rosalind Morini, soprano, and Richard Stross, cornetist, as soloists, will be heard.

MARIE TRUITT WILL SING WITH NORTHERNERS

Marie Truitt, soprano and winner of the first Chicagoland Music Festival contest, will be guest soloist on one of W-G-N's five visible broadcasts from the main auditorium this week. Miss Truitt will be heard with the Northerners at 9:30 tomorrow night. She will sing "Villanelle" by Dell' Acqua and "Jockey on the Carrousel" by Jerome Kern.

At 9 o'clock tonight "Melodies from the Sky" again will be presented by Harold Stokes and the W-G-N dance orchestra. Edna O'Dell, Wayne Van Dine, Jess Kirkpatrick, Margot Rebeil, and the Four Shades of Blue will be featured in a potpourri of popular and novelty tunes.

Tuesday night the "Pageant of Melody" featuring Attilio Baggiore, operatic and concert tenor, will be presented. Mr. Baggiore will sing "Still as the Night" by Bohm and "Colleen o' Mine" by Strickland.

At 9:30 Wednesday Harold Stokes, leading the dance orchestra, will present the Mardi Gras of Melody, featuring Sally Jo Nelson, Lawrence Salerno, the Campus Choir, and Beaux quartet.

A Lou Crandall play about flying, specially written for "Behind the Camera Lines," will be presented by Charles P. Hughes at 9 Friday night, with June Meredith in the starring rôle.

MODERN HOUSE ON FOUR LEVELS

An expertly executed, modern home which has just been built at 90th street and Bell avenue, Beverly Hills. The owner is Stanley Balaskas; the architect, William Sevic, 1900 Blue Island avenue. The exterior walls are of cream colored face brick.

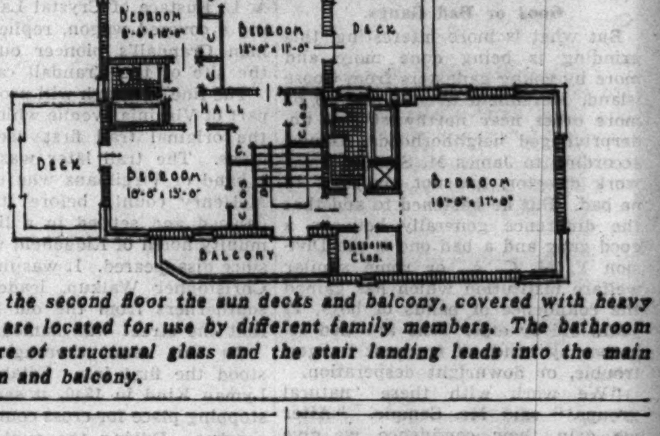
A new architectural trend is seen in this floor layout with its steel casement corner windows, its first floor terrace integrated with the house itself, the ease of access between rooms. This home has four floor levels.



On the second floor the sun decks and balcony, covered with heavy canvas, are located for use by different family members. The bathroom walls are of structural glass and the stair landing leads into the main bedroom and balcony.

BEVERLY HILLS HOME DESIGNED ON MODERN LINES

Air Conditioned House on Four Levels.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

It is a real pleasure to come upon such a beautifully executed home moderne—a home which inculcates many of the major influences which are shaping our modern trend, and yet which has been designed with dignity and obvious restraint.

Mr. Sevic, the architect, reveals a deep sympathy with the frankly modern architectural style. He has flung tradition to the winds in the handling of the house exterior, but he has not permitted his enthusiasm to lead him into any radical extremes. The result is a distinguished dwelling which is happily free from that coldness of atmosphere which often marks the work of those who, the world over, are leading the vanguard of our international stylists in domestic architecture.

Perhaps the certain intangible warmth, the surprising warmth in a house moderne, is partly obtained by the use of soft cream colored face brick for the exterior walls, and rich red sandstone for the trim. For, despite the design which snaps a number of links with the traditions of the past, the house possesses a quiet, poised, serene atmosphere all its own.

House Modern in Construction.

Nor is this home moderne only in its architectural style, nor forward looking only in its flat roofs, its sun decks, and corner windows. [For after all is said, flat roofs and sun decks do not make a modern house!] It is modern in its construction technique, its thorough insulation and air conditioning, and the functional relation between rooms—the open type of planning which is seen more and more these days, and which is specifically adapted to ideal living conditions.

A study of the floor plans will show, concretely, the advantages of this home. There is ease of circulation throughout the house, and the windows are placed where they will afford maximum light, air, and wall space. The roof decks are well located, being accessible from the second floor bedrooms.

One of the first claims of the exponents of moderne architecture is that the exterior of a house should be determined by the interior plans; that the comfort and convenience and economy of floor layout are of major importance, and no exterior, however beautiful, should be allowed to dictate the interior room arrangement.

Traditional Exterior Possible.

Architects who prefer the traditional agree with the modernists that the house of tomorrow will be planned from within, but they insist that a moderne plan can be incorporated in a traditional shell. This is true, and though it is not always an easy thing to do, a skilful architect can manage it.

Some modern features which have been made a part of this present home in Beverly include built-in incinerator, Venetian blinds recessed into window sockets, steel casement windows located at the wall corners, structural glass walls in the bathrooms and kitchen, roof decks and balcony covered with durable deck canvas, recreation room in basement which is reached from entrance hall, shower stall and powder room, four levels to the residence interior, and gas fired air conditioning equipment.

The house stands on a 125 foot lot and could be built for between 40 and 50 cents a cubic foot.

Those who are pondering the question, "What style house," will be interested in a few facts dealing with the subject of "How do most people feel about these modern outsides of houses?"

Not long ago a research organization set out to get an answer to this question.

Quoting from the Architectural forum:

"At Fortune magazine's request, this independent research organization rang 3,000 doorbells and asked housewives, clerks, laborers, merchants, and bankers what they thought about colonial and modern architecture. In one hand the inquisitor held a photograph of a modern exterior, and in the other a photograph of a colonial. 'If,' said he, 'you had to choose between those two houses for your home, and they were the same except for style, which would you choose?'

"The preferences were colonial, 56.3 per cent: modern, 41.2 per cent; don't know, 2.5 per cent. The relatively large proportion of choices for modern houses were not, as might be supposed, among the younger people! Men over and under 40 and women under 40 were nearly equally for it at around 43 per cent, and women over 40 only a little less favorable at 36 per cent. Geographically, the extremes are between the plain states of the west, where only 37.2 per cent of the people like the modern, and the southwest, the only region in which a majority, 54.1 per cent, prefer it."

Such figures in themselves are rather amazing when one considers how comparatively new in this country is modern architecture! Certainly no one knows how popular the modern styles will become in the next twenty years. Some prognosticators predict it will sweep the country. Others insist that architectural design has always shown periods of development with new styles arising from changing modes of living and thought. And these conservatives substantiate their arguments by building proofs last year from the city of Washington. In this city in 1935 there was quite a building boom—with many houses electrified and marvelously mechanized, fireproofed and air conditioned. But as for achitecture they were as traditional as in the days of George Washington and Alexander Hamilton, with the exception of some concessions to modern ideas in the form of attached garages, ground floor terraces, and occasionally a second floor roof deck.

RESORT THEATER AT LAKE ZURICH TO GIVE 'SUN UP'

"Sun Up," a drama of the Carolina hills by Lulu Vollmer, will be presented by the Lake Zurich summer theater at 8:30 o'clock tonight in the little theater near the sea wall. John Driscoll will direct.

The Carolinian drama, the second presentation of the actors, will bring the third season into full swing. It was here in 1934 the little band of Chicago and suburban enthusiasts organized to present their first plays.

In a wooded section of the south shore of Lake Zurich, the headquarters are located in an old transformed inn, the former Dixie summer resort. The building houses living quarters, a stage, seats for 120 spectators and accommodations for occasional guests.

The leader of the enterprise is Fred W. Bray of Kenilworth, one of the organizers. Manager Bray formerly was with the Threshold Players and the Theater guild on the north shore.

The summer theater is a laboratory for both work and play, composed of professionals and amateurs, every one participating in the productions.

Announcement is made of the recent marriage of Miss Lorrain Gaggin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. F. N. Gaggin, 3310 North Avers avenue, to Oliver Hervey Duggins Jr., son of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Druggins of Fredericktown, Mo. Mr. and Mrs. Duggins went to Long Island for a wedding trip where Mr. Duggins, former captain of Northwestern university's track team, competed in the Olympic trials.

SETTLEMENTS PLAN DIVERSIFIED AUGUST PROGRAM

Outings, Concerts, and Dances Slated.

Extensive programs for August have been arranged by several northwest side settlements for boys and girls who have been unable to attend the various camps. Accent will be placed by the Northwestern University settlement, 1400 Augusta boulevard, on a program for young people of high school age and over which will include a series of excursions each Wednesday evening from now until the middle of September to places of interest in the city.

Wednesday a trip will be made to the Chicago Lighting institute on the thirty-eighth floor of the Civic Opera building, Washington boulevard and Wacker drive. There the group will see a "Pageant of Light" and will visit the ABC Broadcasting studio on the forty-second floor. The first Wednesday in August will be spent in South Chicago, where the young people will be entertained by friends of the settlement in Hyde Park. The Municipal airport will be included in the trip the following Wednesday. Miss Sophie Zadlo and Allen Nelson are supervising the program.

Dances also Planned.

Every Thursday evening there will be a dance for young people under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Eutin and Friday evenings there will be a motion picture or a band concert. The Friday evening plans are being made by Michael Rachwolski.

The senior dramatics groups under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Meffert will present one act plays, pantomimes, tableaux, and stunts every Monday evening beginning tomorrow and continuing through September.

The vacant lot next door, which was bought by Northwestern University settlement last year, is being converted into an outdoor garden with painted scenery patterned after the Nuremberg gardens. Under the direction of Charles Dering, a scenic artist, neighborhood men are painting, on three sides of the enclosure, mountain and valley scenes.

Benches Being Built.

Benches are being built from packing boxes donated by local merchants. A refreshment booth and band stand also will be erected. According to Miss Harriet Vittum, head resident, the work probably will be completed in time for this week's Friday evening band concert. If the WPA band is not available Friday a motion picture will be shown instead.

Tomorrow the third party of ninety-five boys and girls will leave Chicago Commons, 955 West Grand avenue, for two weeks at the Chicago Commons Farm camp at New Buffalo, Mich. Two more parties will go in August and the camp will close Friday, Sept. 4.

For those who are unable to attend, organizations on the north side are planning outings during August in various suburban picnic places. The Community Circles of Winnetka have entertained groups of boys and girls of the settlement for several years.

P.-T. A. President

Mrs. Herbert Teisler, newly elected president of the Joseph Lovett P.-T. A., is spending time with her chairmen during the summer in preparing a program for the next school term around the recently adopted theme, "Character Growth."

NOT MUCH OF A BOAT!
WELL, WOTTA YA WANT FOR $1.50, THE QUEEN MARY?
THE NERVE OF THEM! GOING ON A VACATION WITHOUT ME!! ? WELL I'D GIVE A PURTY TO KNOW WHERE THEY'VE WENT TO SPEND IT.
I THINK IN JOE CARLETO'S GARAGE, MAMIE THAT'S WHERE THEY PARKED THEIR CAR.
WISE GUYS! SO THEY THOUGHT THEY'D GIVE ME THE SLIP, EH?
YES MA'M, THEY LEFT THEIR CAR PARKED HERE, AND WENT DOWN TO THE DOCKS TO TAKE AN EXCURSION BOAT.
THANKS.
MOONSHINE, BEFORE THE BOAT PULLS OUT I REALLY THINK I HAD OUGHT TO PHONE YOUR AUNT MAMIE AND TELL HER GOOD-BY.
I GUESS THAT'S THE SAFEST WAY TO TELL HER GOOD-BY, AT THAT.
MOONLIGHT EXCURSION ABOARD THE MOON BEAM IS THAT YOU, KIDDO?
YAS WHADDA YA WANT?
LISTEN, SWEETHEART, I JUST HAD TO CALL YOU UP AND KISS YOU GOOD-BY— ····· SMACK ··· SMACK.
HA! JUST WHAT I SUSPECTED!
HOLY H. SMOKE! I WONDER WHO THAT WAS I WAS TALKING TO?
WAIT!
TOOOOOOT
IS HE HURT MUCH?
NO-HE HIT ON HIS HEAD. HE'S WAKIN' UP NOW
CAN I JUMP? OH BOY! CAN I JUMP!

DARN THAT CARPENTER! I PHONED HIM TO COME OVER HERE AND FIX OUR FLOAT AND HE SAYS HE CAN'T MAKE IT TODAY
WHAT'S THE IDEA OF PHONING A CARPENTER? AM I HELPLESS
I'LL HAVE THAT FLOAT FIXED IN A JIFFY - AND BETTER THAN ANY CARPENTER CAN DO IT NEVER SAW SUCH HELPLESSNESS! A HAMMER IN BIM'S HAND WOULD BE AS OUT OF PLACE AS A FISH ON A FLAGPOLE!
OH WELL - IT'S A GOOD THING THEY HAVE OLD HANDY ANDY AROUND HERE TO FIX THINGS
DI-DE-DUM DUM-DUM TI-DUM
A FEW NAILS - A LITTLE ELBOW GREASE AND BRAINS - THAT'S ALL ONE NEEDS TO HAVE THIS OLD FLOAT LOOKING LIKE A MILLION DOLLAR STEEL PIER IN NO TIME
THERE! THE FLOAT'S ALL SHIPSHAPE! AND I DEFY ANY CARPENTER IN THE WORLD TO TURN OUT A NEATER JOB
OH CHESTER — GO WASH YOUR HANDS - DINNER IS READY -
GOSH! MAMA - I'M HUNGRY
OH BIM - DINNER IS READY - HAVE YOU SEEN ANDY?
YES - HE'S DOWN BY THE LAKE FIXING THE FLOAT
I WISH THAT MAN WOULD STAY PUT - SINCE WE MOVED OUT HERE HE'S BEEN RUNNING AROUND LIKE A CAT IN A FISH MARKET
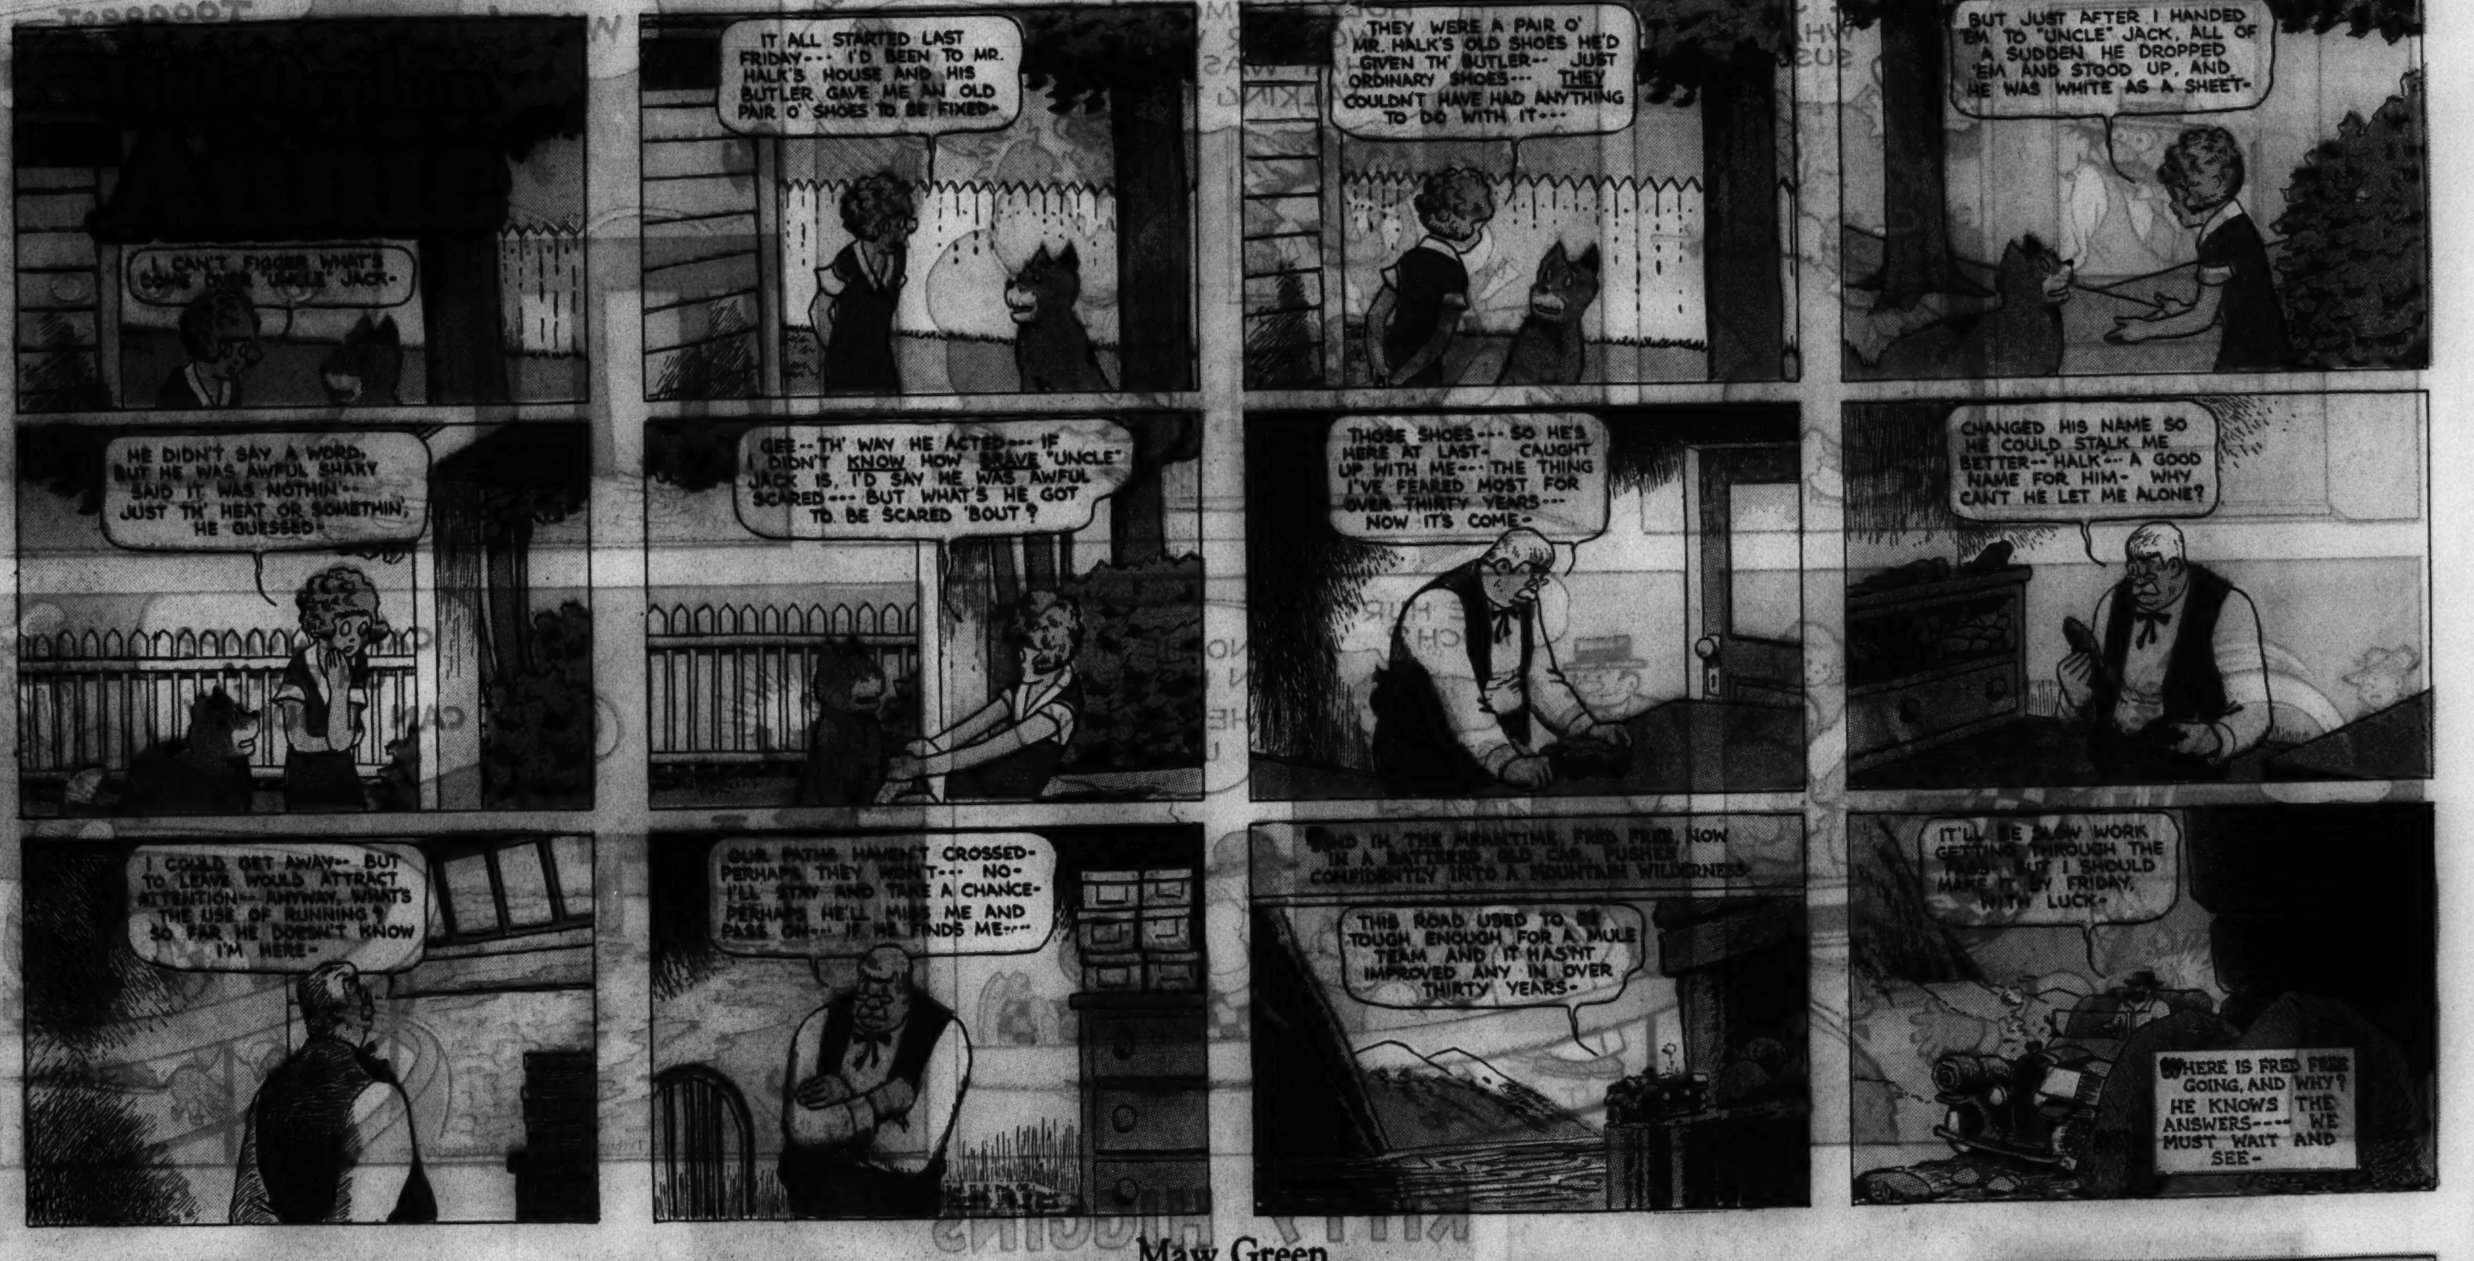
HELP! OH MIN!



I CAN'T FIGGER WHAT'S COME OVER "UNCLE" JACK-
IT ALL STARTED LAST FRIDAY--- I'D BEEN TO MR. HALK'S HOUSE AND HIS BUTLER GAVE ME AN OLD PAIR O' SHOES TO BE FIXED-
THEY WERE A PAIR O' MR. HALK'S OLD SHOES HE'D GIVEN TH' BUTLER-- JUST ORDINARY SHOES--- THEY COULDN'T HAVE HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH IT---
BUT JUST AFTER I HANDED 'EM TO "UNCLE" JACK, ALL OF A SUDDEN HE DROPPED 'EM AND STOOD UP, AND HE WAS WHITE AS A SHEET-
HE DIDN'T SAY A WORD, BUT HE WAS AWFUL SHAKY SAID IT WAS NOTHIN'-- JUST TH' HEAT OR SOMETHIN', HE GUESSED-
GEE-- TH' WAY HE ACTED--- IF I DIDN'T KNOW HOW BRAVE "UNCLE" JACK IS, I'D SAY HE WAS AWFUL SCARED--- BUT WHAT'S HE GOT TO BE SCARED 'BOUT?
THOSE SHOES--- SO HE'S HERE AT LAST- CAUGHT UP WITH ME--- THE THING I'VE FEARED MOST FOR OVER THIRTY YEARS--- NOW IT'S COME-CHANGED HIS NAME SO HE COULD STALK ME BETTER-- HALK-- A GOOD NAME FOR HIM- WHY CAN'T HE LET ME ALONE?
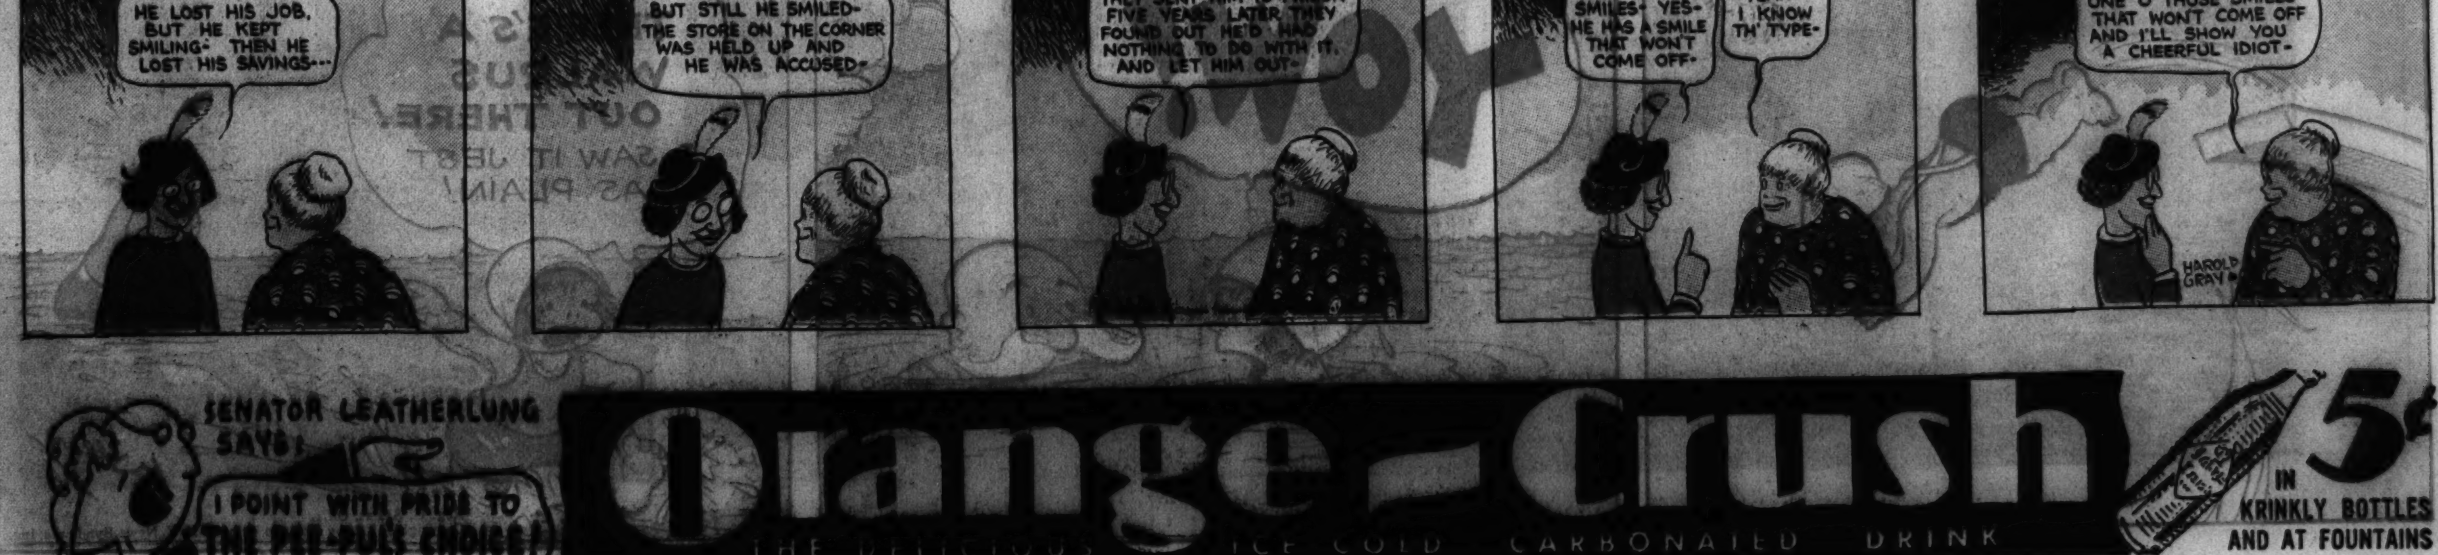
I COULD GET AWAY-- BUT TO LEAVE WOULD ATTRACT ATTENTION-- ANYWAY, WHAT'S THE USE OF RUNNING? SO FAR HE DOESN'T KNOW I'M HERE-
OUR PATHS HAVEN'T CROSSED- PERHAPS THEY WON'T--- NO- I'LL STAY AND TAKE A CHANCE- PERHAPS HE'LL MISS ME AND PASS ON--- IF HE FINDS ME----
AND IN THE MEANTIME, FRED FREE, NOW IN A BATTERED OLD CAR, PUSHES CONFIDENTLY INTO A MOUNTAIN WILDERNESS-
THIS ROAD USED TO BE TOUGH ENOUGH FOR A MULE TEAM AND IT HASN'T IMPROVED ANY IN OVER THIRTY YEARS-
IT'LL BE SLOW WORK GETTING THROUGH THE PASS- BUT I SHOULD MAKE IT BY FRIDAY, WITH LUCK-
WHERE IS FRED FREE GOING, AND WHY? HE KNOWS THE ANSWERS---- WE MUST WAIT AND SEE-

Maw Green



HE LOST HIS JOB, BUT HE KEPT SMILING- THEN HE LOST HIS SAVINGS---
BUT STILL HE SMILED- THE STORE ON THE CORNER WAS HELD UP AND HE WAS ACCUSED-
THEY SENT HIM TO PRISON- FIVE YEARS LATER THEY FOUND OUT HE'D HAD NOTHING TO DO WITH IT, AND LET HIM OUT-
AND HE STILL SMILES- YES- HE HAS A SMILE THAT WON'T COME OFF-
YEAH- I KNOW TH' TYPE-
SHOW ME A GUY WITH ONE O' THOSE SMILES THAT WON'T COME OFF AND I'LL SHOW YOU A CHEERFUL IDIOT-

Spry will give you lighter cakes, flakier pastry, crisper fried foods, or Double your money back

THOUSANDS of women have accepted our challenge. And now they're Spry users for life! "I wouldn't have believed a shortening could make such a difference," they tell us. "I made biscuits with Spry and they were as fine and delicate as little cakes," declares one woman. "I get the grandest, flakiest pie crust with Spry you ever tasted," says another. "I'll never use any shortening but Spry in my cakes from now on," vows a third. "They taste so much better and I save money, too."

Far superior for frying

Spry is simply wonderful for frying, everyone agrees. No smoke or unpleasant odor in the kitchen. No heavy grease-soaked foods. They're crisp, light, tasty, doubly delicious and as easy to digest as if baked or boiled. Spry doesn't "break down" under frying heat and get dark and cloudy. Doesn't absorb food flavors or odors. It stays so clear and fresh you can fry with it over and over.

Spry is purer—ALL-vegetable

It's made in a brand-new factory by new and improved methods no other shortening manufacturer uses. The moment you open the can you can see Spry is different. It's so much whiter, creamier, smooth as satin, finer in every way. Spry stays fresh indefinitely—right on the pantry shelf. As a result, it's always soft and easy to cream—you can mix your cake in half the time.

Don't wait. Try Spry today. Take us up on this amazing offer. You win either way. Either you get doubly delicious cakes, pies, biscuits, fried foods—or you get double your money back!

Read this Sensational Offer

Buy a can of Spry from your grocer. Give Spry every test in pies, cakes, biscuits, fried foods. If you don't find Spry the best shortening you ever used, write to Lever Brothers Company, Cambridge, Mass., stating briefly your reasons for not preferring Spry. Send your name and address and the strip of tin that the key takes off when you open the can. You will promptly receive back twice what you paid for Spry. This offer is limited to one can to a family.

Stops next-morning headache faster! Quiets the stomach—soothes the nerves...

ACTUAL TESTS by doctors recently proved that Bromo-Seltzer stops next-morning headaches faster than any other remedy they tested!

Bromo-Seltzer does other things for you, too—things many remedies can't do. Helps to settle an upset stomach, soothes jangled nerves.

And—this is very important—reduces the excess lactic acid overindulgence causes in the blood. You feel fit faster after Bromo-Seltzer!

Ask for Bromo-Seltzer by its full name at drugstores, soda fountains. It's handy to keep a bottle in your medicine cabinet, too.

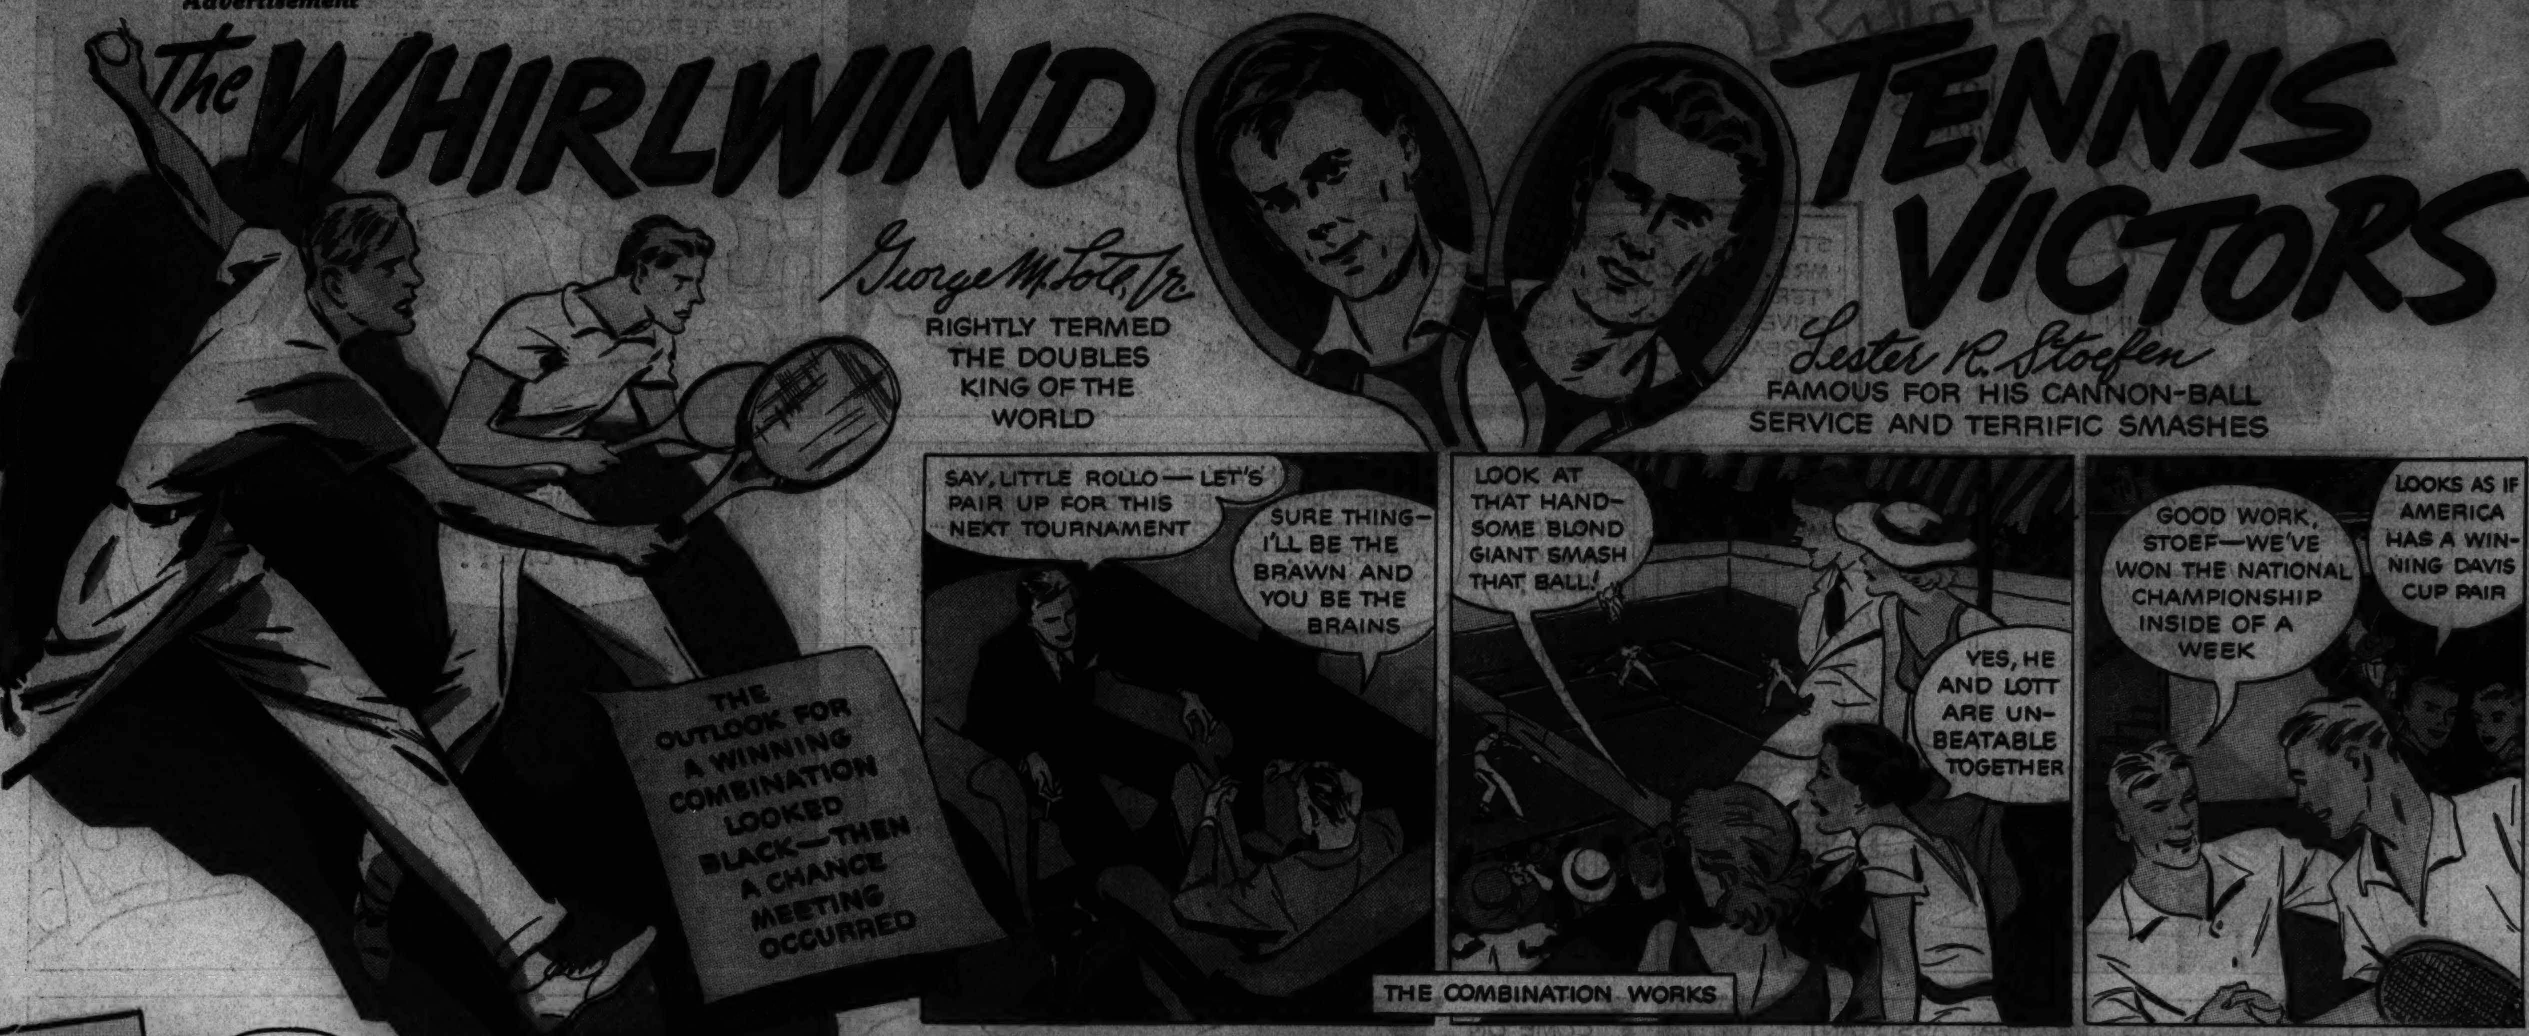
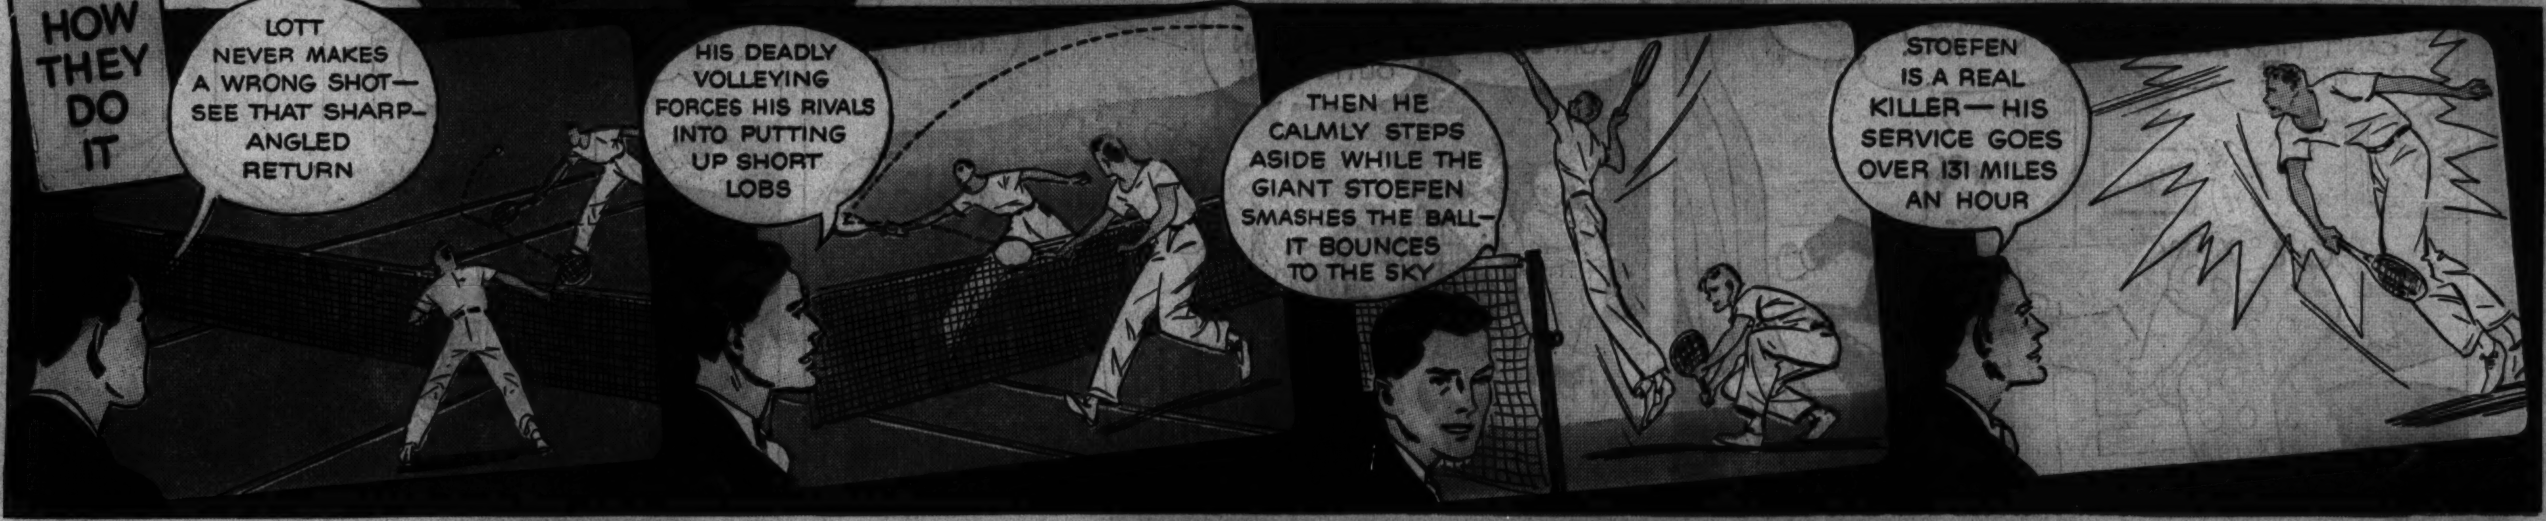
The WHIRLWIND TENNIS VICTORS



George M. Lott, Jr.
RIGHTLY TERMED THE DOUBLES KING OF THE WORLD
Lester R. Stoefen
FAMOUS FOR HIS CANNON-BALL SERVICE AND TERRIFIC SMASHES
THE OUTLOOK FOR A WINNING COMBINATION LOOKED BLACK—THEN A CHANCE MEETING OCCURRED
SAY, LITTLE ROLLO—LET'S PAIR UP FOR THIS NEXT TOURNAMENT
SURE THING—I'LL BE THE BRAWN AND YOU BE THE BRAINS
LOOK AT THAT HANDSOME BLOND GIANT SMASH THAT BALL!
YES, HE AND LOTT ARE UNBEATABLE TOGETHER
THE COMBINATION WORKS
GOOD WORK, STOEF—WE'VE WON THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP INSIDE OF A WEEK
LOOKS AS IF AMERICA HAS A WINNING DAVIS CUP PAIR

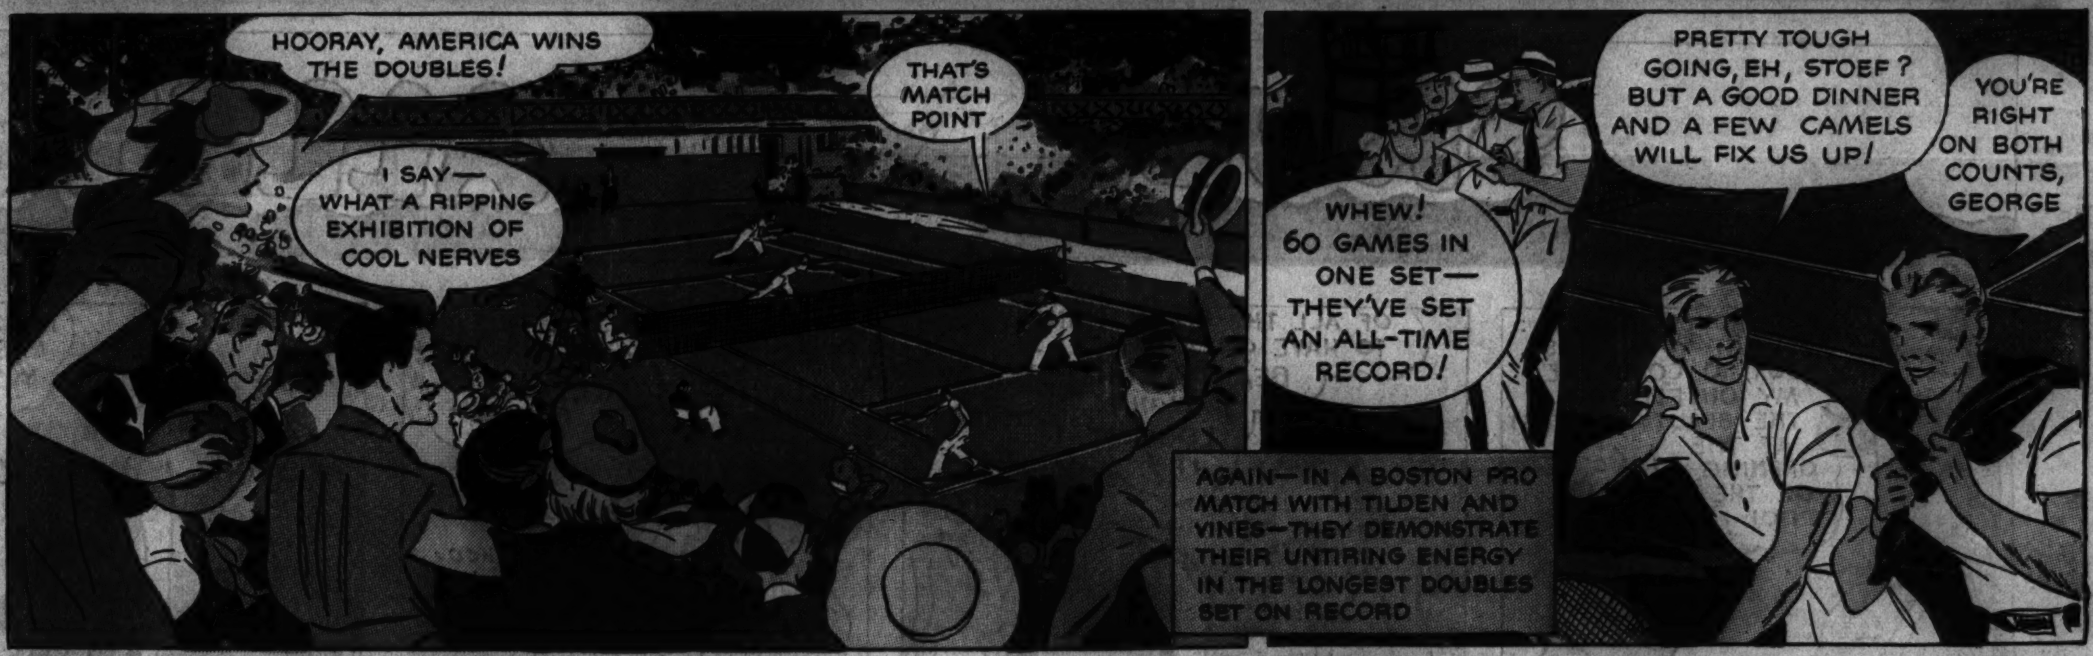


HOW THEY DO IT
LOTT NEVER MAKES A WRONG SHOT—SEE THAT SHARP-ANGLED RETURN
HIS DEADLY VOLLEYING FORCES HIS RIVALS INTO PUTTING UP SHORT LOBS
THEN HE CALMLY STEPS ASIDE WHILE THE GIANT STOEFEN SMASHES THE BALL—IT BOUNCES TO THE SKY
STOEFEN IS A REAL KILLER—HIS SERVICE GOES OVER 131 MILES AN HOUR

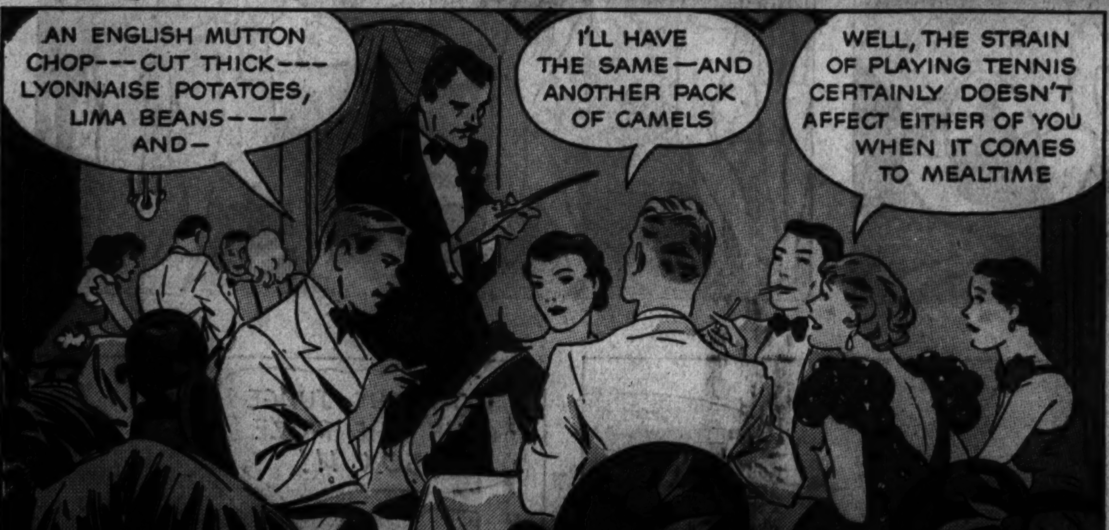
AND SO—THE TERRORS of the TENNIS COURTS—LOTT and STOEFEN

WIN THE CHAMPIONSHIPS OF GREAT BRITAIN, FRANCE, AND AUSTRALIA, AS WELL AS THE U.S.—THEN SCORE A VICTORY FOR AMERICA IN THE FAMOUS DAVIS CUP MATCHES

©1936, R. J. Reynolds Tob. Co.



HOORAY, AMERICA WINS THE DOUBLES!
THAT'S MATCH POINT
I SAY—WHAT A RIPPING EXHIBITION OF COOL NERVES
AGAIN—IN A BOSTON PRO MATCH WITH TILDEN AND VINES—THEY DEMONSTRATE THEIR UNTIRING ENERGY IN THE LONGEST DOUBLES SET ON RECORD
PRETTY TOUGH GOING, EH, STOEF? BUT A GOOD DINNER AND A FEW CAMELS WILL FIX US UP!
YOU'RE RIGHT ON BOTH COUNTS, GEORGE
WHEW! 60 GAMES IN ONE SET—THEY'VE SET AN ALL-TIME RECORD!



AN ENGLISH MUTTON CHOP---CUT THICK---LYONNAISE POTATOES, LIMA BEANS---AND—I'LL HAVE THE SAME—AND ANOTHER PACK OF CAMELS
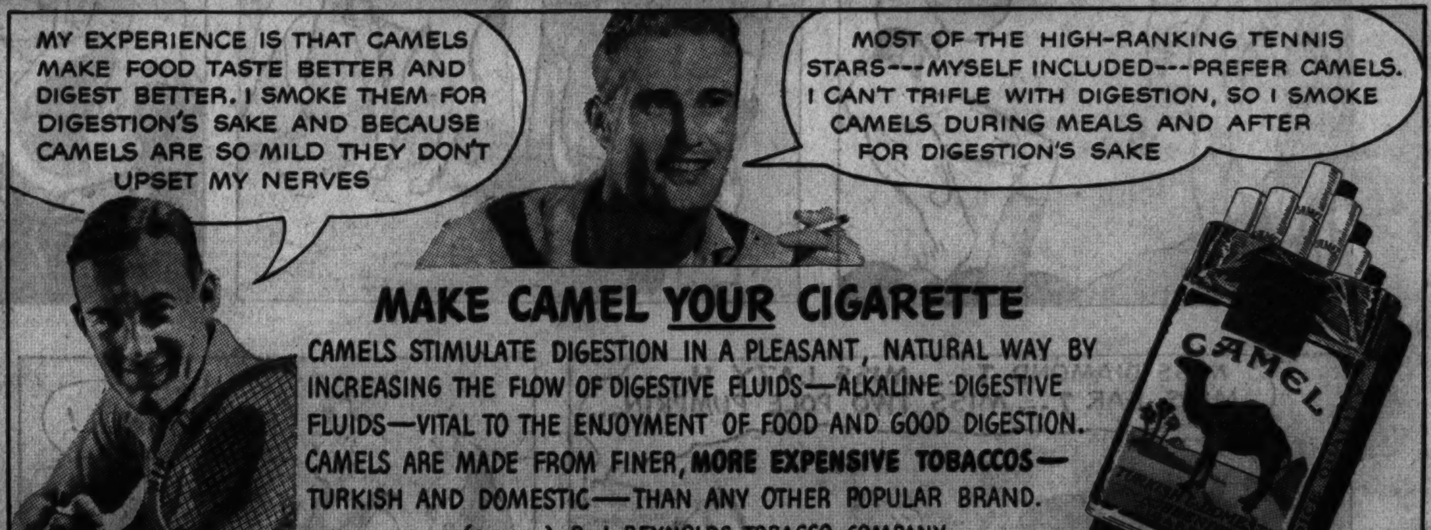
WELL, THE STRAIN OF PLAYING TENNIS CERTAINLY DOESN'T AFFECT EITHER OF YOU WHEN IT COMES TO MEALTIME



MY EXPERIENCE IS THAT CAMELS MAKE FOOD TASTE BETTER AND DIGEST BETTER. I SMOKE THEM FOR DIGESTION'S SAKE AND BECAUSE CAMELS ARE SO MILD THEY DON'T UPSET MY NERVES
MOST OF THE HIGH-RANKING TENNIS STARS---MYSELF INCLUDED---PREFER CAMELS. I CAN'T TRIFLE WITH DIGESTION, SO I SMOKE CAMELS DURING MEALS AND AFTER FOR DIGESTION'S SAKE
CAMEL

MAKE CAMEL YOUR CIGARETTE

CAMELS STIMULATE DIGESTION IN A PLEASANT, NATURAL WAY BY INCREASING THE FLOW OF DIGESTIVE FLUIDS—ALKALINE DIGESTIVE FLUIDS—VITAL TO THE ENJOYMENT OF FOOD AND GOOD DIGESTION. CAMELS ARE MADE FROM FINER, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—TURKISH AND DOMESTIC—THAN ANY OTHER POPULAR BRAND.

POETRY? WHY, DAD, THIS BUDDING BUSINESS TYCOON WOULDN'T KNOW POETRY IF HE HEARD IT. ALL HE KNOWS IS SALES AND SERVICE
IS THAT SO? LISTEN, I CAN MAKE UP BETTER POETRY THAN YOU EVER READ
LET'S HEAR SOME
HOW'S THIS — A BOOK OF MATCHES 'NEATH THE BOUGH, A PIPE, PRINCE ALBERT, AND THOU
YOU OAF—THAT'S NOT GOOD POETRY
NO, BUT IT'S SWELL SMOKING-
AND EVEN A REAL POET WOULD BE STUMPED DESCRIBING THE TASTINESS AND MELLOWNESS OF PRINCE ALBERT

IT'S OUR TREAT IF YOU'RE NOT DELIGHTED WITH P.A.

A GET-ACQUAINTED, NO-RISK OFFER STANDS BEHIND EVERY BIG RED TIN OF PRINCE ALBERT. IT SAYS: SMOKE 20 FRAGRANT PIPEFULS OF PRINCE ALBERT. Day By Day Story of the Experimental Farms

Drouth Kills Poults

July 25, 1936.

THE turkeys and guineas on THE TRIBUNE'S experimental farms which have been concluding the hatching season by introducing new families to the barnyard have been having a hard time of it, all because of the dry weather. Several birds have been disappointed in the size of their families because, after completing their incubation period, the inner membranes of the eggs have been so dry and sticky that the offspring have had difficulty in making their entrance into the world [or rather their exit from the eggs.]

Moisture for Eggs.

The poultry keeper on the Wheaton farm has been moistening some of the eggs and nests artificially, but in many cases the nests are hidden in the woods or along fence rows and the eggs can't be helped. These eggs and nests would be naturally moistened by the mother birds in normal times, but because of the drouth they get no chance to wet their feathers in damp fields, and therefore cannot transfer this moisture to the eggs.

The eggs of one turkey hen were moistened and the old bird repayed the kindness by leading 13 young ones into the barnyard. Other "homesites" have been moistened with comparable results.

When we were there the other day [these 13 poults were then only one day old] a search was on high and low for the 13 youngsters. After a 15 minute game of hide-and-go-seek all 13 were found under a feed rack in the sheep barn. The mother hen had gone into the rack for some reason or other, and the young ones couldn't get into the rack so they did the next best thing—they crawled under it. After they were dug out, it wasn't long until the whole family was satisfied again and the hen was covering the 13 poults.

Pheasants Resourceful.

The ringneck pheasants which were hatched out on the farm know how to beat the heat. During the hot weather these birds usually stay close to the shrubs and flowers near the greenhouse—where it is cool and where they are protected from the sun. Occasionally the birds take a flying run under the water spray which is being used in the garden, thereby getting an even better "cooling off."

Water for Wild Birds.

The water situation for the birds isn't so serious on the experimental farm as in some other locations. On the Yorkville farm there is Rob Roy creek as well as the Fox river, while at the Wheaton farm there are three ponds which the birds make good use of.

One of the boys was saying the other day, though, that song and game birds are in need of "water help" in many locations. A farmer near Yorkville placed a shallow tub of water in an oat field near a hedge fence. Later in the day he went back and found 18 pheasants and a number of quail taking advantage of his hospitality.

Farmers have also been thinking about food and cover for game birds, as well as water. Because of the drouth, many farmers have cut hay in every possible location due to the scarcity of regular hay crops. Odd corners and growths along fence rows which are allowed to grow when there is a good hay crop have been cut down in order to make up for this shortage. For this reason the game birds do not have the amount of cover and feed that they get in other years.

Good Manners Should Begin in the Nursery

By Helen Bartlett.

CONSIDERATION for others, as has been said many times before, is one of the basic principles of etiquet and general good behavior. Teaching small girls and boys the little niceties should begin at a very early age. No child is too young to have good manners. If problems are met just as soon as they are presented [and it is amazing at what an early age the little unattractive qualities in the child make themselves evident], the bad habits will be much easier to correct. Then, when the child is older his good manners will be perfectly natural and instinctive, giving him poise and assurance.

Parental example is the best teacher and inspiration. Children resent being lectured, and told what they should do and shouldn't do. And it isn't much fun to be the lecturer, either. It is much more painless if the task of teaching good manners can be accomplished by subtle suggestion and example. It won't always work, of course, and all children do not respond in the same way. In that case firmer parental control will have to be exercised.

Children Should Be Taught Not to Destroy Toys.

When the children are still small they can be taught that destructive practices and casual tossing about of toys make work for some one else, and that if toys are deliberately destroyed they cannot be used to play with, too.

When the child becomes a little older he can be taught some of the social niceties, beginning in a simple way, of course. Introductions, for example. Parents should present their children to grownups and teach them to acknowledge introductions politely and gracefully. Small girls and boys should say, "How do you do, Mrs. Jones." And the grownups should reply with the same friendly dignity. Children should be taught to respond to conversation directed to them, to answer for instance, "Yes, Mrs. Jones," to questions.

Little men should be taught, at the earliest possible age, to lift their hats when they meet girls or women whom they know. At first these gestures may be exaggerated a little. A boy is likely to remove his cap with a bit of awkwardness and too much flourish, but the important thing is that he remove it, rather than simply touching it or doing nothing about it.

Small Boys Should Remember to Open Doors for Women.

Small boys should learn to remember to open doors for girls and older women, and to wait for them to precede them when going through doorways or when getting into motor cars. And when sitting down to the dinner table they can be taught to hold the chair while their mothers are seated.

The essentials of table habits should be taught in the nursery. It is there that lasting habits are formed concerning the use of table implements. Gradually, as the more complicated foods are allowed in the child's diet, the more complicated table amenities can be brought to his attention. Then when he grows up, his good behavior at the table will be instinctive because of his early training. He will know which fork to take because all his life he has been using the right fork.

All these and other little niceties and traits of good breeding are admirable qualities, perhaps because they are so rare. They make the child so much more lovable, and help to prepare him to be confident and poised and successful when he takes his place in the complex society of adults.

Midsummer Junior Styles Are Decorative

They Have a Grownup Air and Clever Patterns That Delight Children.

By Rhea Seeger.

MID-SUMMER clothes for youngsters are unexpectedly decorative and wearable. Their double charm pleases every one, including the small young ladies and gentlemen who have to wear styles that suit the whim of a fond parent or doting relative. Dull, uninteresting, small frocks and suits now are so rare that children no longer rebel when a trip to town is scheduled. Junior shopping expeditions this summer have a record for untroubled calm, for shopping completed without a sign of revolt from the long suffering younger set.

The reason . . . for the first time good looking dresses and suits in effective colors and color contrasts, and interesting new styles borrowed from every corner of the globe have been adapted for the American younger set. Some of the most successful of summer clothes so featured for one's progeny are the adorable frocks and suits copied from the colorful peasant costume of the Austrian, Lanz of Salzburg, a great designer who took the older generation by storm with clever coats and sports clothes that have a strong tang of Tyrolean peasant beauty. He came to America and tested and perfected a cotton with a foreign texture in a weave of similar to the coarse cottons of Austria. The results are shown in the vivid frocks illustrated. Three of his best prints have been used—the gingerbread couple, the mountain house, and the Noah's Ark pattern. Dull blue, a scarlet, and a rose pink are the three colors, with the patterns or designs in white, or in reverse formation.

Hand Blocked Dimities Have Clever Lines and Details.

And while these clever adaptations of the peasant Tyrol were being woven American designers created hand blocked dimities for children, printed dimities for summer wear in good American patterns and styles. These clothes have clever details, and with an informality and freedom that children love.

Some of the newest finds in town have been sketched, midsummer fashions that also are suitable for the first September days at school.

A. . . . This brother and sister duet of sheer white dimity has a gay print of small rose colored sailboats. This is one of the newest hand blocked prints from the American designers. The short sleeves and unusual neckline are particularly American in style, and the brother suit is redeemed from any hint of sissiness by shorts of solid color that contrast with the shade of the boat. Other brother and sister ensembles equally as attractive and distinctive come in a variety of materials and color combinations.

B. . . . The peasant Tyrolean influence introduced by Lanz of Salzburg. The brightly printed cotton has that foreign weave carefully copied from imported cloths, but the material is from American textile makers. This brother and sister ensemble features the Noah's Ark pattern. Little sister's frock has a tiny scrap of white apron that's banded with cotton of the dress. It is fastened to the full skirted dress with the famous filagree silver buttons that Lanz attaches to all his originals, but that must be removed when tubbing. A puffed sleeved white guimpe completes the outfit Little brother's outfit has short shorts of the printed cotton, and suspenders.

Row of Snow White Ducks Waddle Around the Hemline.

C. . . . A row of ducks waddle around the hemline of this American designed frock in tub material resembling narrow, waled broadcloth. Square cut, the neckline is further accented with a lacing of white in front to match the snowy white ducks. Another dress of similar style comes with rows of sheer white braid for trim, and the colors are blue and rose.

D. . . . This suspender dress and matching suit for brother features still another Lanz of Salzburg design. The fitted bodice top of the sister dress covers a white guimpe, and the brother suit is completely of the printed cotton, with filagree buttons on both outfits..

E. . . . Beach togs for children are as colorful as those for grownups, and have smart accessories copied from the larger editions. Brother and sister alike wear wool swim suits, sister's being one piece with straps, little brother's, wool shorts with a huge white anchor on the side. Both probably would like one of those white hooded terry cloth robes with pockets. Rubber caps, sneakers, and beach bags are miniature copies of what the older shoppers find in any sports department. All models sketched are from a well known children's department in a Chicago store.

Modern Lighting Brightens Drab Home Interiors

MODERN lighting experts are making it possible to convert any and every "dark" spot in the house into practical, well lighted corners.

Alcoves and window seats always have been a problem to light well at night. They so often fade into a depressing background of shadow, and are quite useless for any close work such as reading, studying, or sewing. Usually when the house was built no provision was made to light them, and so they have remained.

Now, with the modern architectural trend toward using every square foot of space, these once dark corners are being lighted in the modern manner- from above! Built-in or installed lighting panels—panels of glass with lights above them, are placed into the ceiling directly above the alcove, window seat, or corner to be lighted. This panel may contain a clear light or a colored one, or even combine both types.

If there is a desk in the corner which has been given this lighted ceiling panel, it is doubtful indeed if the overhead light can be made to provide sufficient illumination for work at the desk. Every desk in a house should have its own special lamp, a local lamp, to prevent eyestrain for the worker at the desk. The same is true for every chair which is put to use for reading or other eye work. Control of light and flexibility of light, as well as adequate light, is the aim of modern lighting. And this is defeated when ornamental lighting or inadequate lighting displace practical table and floor lamps!

Fat Fast?

125 lbs.

"...the thing one finds many a fashionable New Yorker drinking everywhere you go is a BonKora Cocktail, made from Orange Juice and BonKora.

"Its rage seems to have started when it became noised about that a registered nurse, who could no longer work on account of her weak, fatty condition, lost 45 pounds and 10 inches off her hips with the result that she was able to go back to work again mainly by resorting to this pungent BonKora Cocktail method."

No Dangerous Drugs—No Thyroid—No Dinitrophenol No Starvation

How the BonKora Cocktail Way Has Helped Many People to Lose Pounds of Ugly Fat

"Drinking a glassful of chilled Orange Juice mixed with a tablespoonful of BonKora, two times a day, and eating their fill of the delicious foods, as shown in the BonKora package, it is claimed, has made many people lose from 7 to 67 pounds, and has made their waist and bust measurements go down from 3 to 11 inches.

"The reason why this Orange Juice and BonKora way seems to produce such amazing results is first, the Orange Juice provides for the necessary vitamins to maintain health and supplies the elements to counteract the harmful over-acid conditions that develop while reducing and, second, the BonKora helps to provide for the proper elimination of the toxins or poisons which often interfere with normal metabolism and make reduction of weight very difficult if not impossible.

Will You Try This Orange Juice and BonKora Way To See If You Can Lose Pounds of Excess Fat?

"Where any person is bothered with avoidable and reducible overweight caused by poor elimination, overeating or overdrinking, which is held responsible for a large percentage of all overweight conditions, it is said that this new method often causes a loss of excess fat that is little short of sensational—Also, new enthusiasts will probably be much interested to know how much better those who have tried it say they feel, how much better they say they sleep and how much better fitted for work they say they are."

Zonta to Lend Hand to Young Career Women

That and Education of Adolescents in Peace Years' Two Objectives.

MEMBERS of Zonta International are entering upon a new year with two particular objectives in mind. Greater coöperation is to be sought between the women executives who are Zonta members and the younger women in business with an eye to furthering the careers of the less experienced workers.

And an educational program for adolescents is to be considered as a method of promoting world peace.

Both fields of activity were recommended at the recent convention of Zonta International at Swampscott, Mass. Mrs. Anna Stovall-Lothian of Boston urged that the rising generation be schooled in a code of brotherhood as the soundest approach toward universal peace. It was the suggestion of Mrs. Marie K. Brown of Chicago that women established in business should interest themselves in assisting younger women in their careers.

Harriet C. Richards Chosen Executive Secretary of Zonta.

MISS HARRIET RICHARDS.

Reëlected to head the organization this coming year is Dr. Dora Neun of Rochester, N. Y., a paper box manufacturer. Mrs. Jean H. Robson of Ottawa, Ont., is first vice president; Miss Elizabeth Krouse of Chicago, a bank executive, treasurer; Miss Harriet C. Richards of Chicago, executive secretary.

District chairmen are Miss Emma Maurice Tighe, Boston; Miss Ellen M. Anderson, St. Paul, Minn.; Mrs. Gladys F. Bogue, Kenmore, N. Y.; Miss Evalyn Burgan, Spokane, Wash., and Mrs. Lena Davidson, Glendale, Cal.

A special committee of the Chicago recreation commission soon will take up the possibility of utilizing school buildings for recreational purposes after school hours with Mayor Kelly.

Dr. Johnson on Chicago Recreation Commission.

Dr. William H. Johnson, superintendent of schools, recently was appointed to the commission as a member of the executive committee. He will consult with the special committee on the schools, which includes Miss Lea D. Taylor, chairman; Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, Mrs. Albion L. Headburg, Miss Agnes Nestor, Mrs. William F. Dummer, Lorado Taft, Mrs. Charles W. Balch, Dr. M. J. O'Connell, and Judge John P. McGoorty.

It has been estimated that the school buildings, which represent an investment of some $250,000,000, are in use only about one-fourth of the time. A large number of the buildings have physical facilities which might be used to advantage after school hours by adults as well as young people, it has been pointed out.

Dr. Philip L. Seaman is chairman of the recreation commission, which was appointed a little over two years ago by Mayor Kelly to study and plan the coördination of the city's various systems and enterprises for recreation. The commission will act in an advisory capacity to the mayor and to the city council.

Questions Before the House

DEAR MRS. BARGELT: What kind of paint should we use to brighten up house awnings? They are badly faded and we thought, perhaps, we might freshen them a little.—T. W.

ANSWER: Use a good grade of exterior house paint, which has been considerably thinned with turpentine.

DEAR MRS. BARGELT: What can we do with the screens of our sun porch so that the view from the outside will be obstructed? We were told there was some special kind of paint that could be used for this purpose. SAM R.

ANSWER: Use a thin white paint and apply to the outside of your screening. This will not obstruct your view, but will keep the "passing" world from looking into the house.

Beverly Season Swinging Into Gayest Period

Yacht Races, Fiestas, and a Tennis Tournament Among Week's Events.

BEVERLY, MASS. Yacht races at Marblehead, water sports at Manchester, a fiesta at Beverly farms, a street fair in Manchester, a horse show at Hamilton, and a tennis tournament of national interest at the Essex Country club were some of the diversions offered Chicagoans last week on the Massachusetts north shore.

The season is swinging into its gayest period with luncheons, teas, and dinner parties providing delightful opportunities for social amenities.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Stone Simpkins III. of New York City are visiting Mr. Simpkins' mother, Mrs. Nathaniel S. Simpkins Jr., at Purple Beachcroft, her Beverly farms summer home. Mrs. Simpkins III. is the former Carmen Zitelmann, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Franz Carl Zitelmann of Berlin, for many years a resident of Chicago, where he was German vice consul. Mrs. Zitelmann was the former Miss Edith Von Klein of Chicago. Mrs. Simpkins Jr. gave a tea at her home in honor of her guests. A band furnished the music and the affair was one of the happiest of the season.

Hutchins Are Spending Summer at Ipswich.

Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, and Mrs. Hutchins are passing the summer in Ipswich, where they have taken Dr. Philip Wilson's estate, Eastfield, on Argilla road for the balance of the season. Their summer home is a charming one with a wonderful view of the marshes, the sand dunes, and the Atlantic ocean beyond.

Miss Cynthia Barr of the Clifton colony left Tuesday for a visit with friends in Chicago.

These are the gay days for the younger colonists. Gordon Ellis, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Groverman Ellis of Chicago, gave a dinner party last week at Killybracken, the Ellis' summer home on Eastern point, Gloucester. After dinner he took his guests to the dance at the Bass Rocks Golf club.

Miss Martha La Fontaine of Chicago has been visiting Miss Helen Pierce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Pierce of the Bass Rocks colony.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Craig of Evanston, Ill., have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Hake at Easterly, their Eastern Point summer home in Gloucester.

Engagement of Susan Means Is Announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitman Means of Tops Field have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Susan Means, to Charles Loring Jackson Noble, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Noble of Pride's Crossing. Miss Means is the granddaughter of Mrs. William H. Hubbard of Chicago and Lake Forest, Ill. She is a member of the Junior league and the Vincent club of Boston, and made her debut during the 1933-'34 season.

Mr. Noble is a Harvard graduate of the class of 1936 and is a member of the Institute of 1770 and the Hasty Pudding club.

Mr. and Mrs. John Russell Christianson have returned to their new home in Chicago after a honeymoon on the north shore. Mrs. Christianson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Judson O. Rogers of Roslindale, became the bride of Mr. Christianson on June 27. She is a graduate of Mount Holyoke college and studied at the University of Chicago.

Mr. Christianson is a graduate of the University of Chicago and its law school, is a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma and the Pad fraternities, and the Chicago Bar association. They are residing at 8147 Ingleside avenue, Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Clay Bartlett of Chicago opened their studio gallery, Tree Tops, last week for an exhibition by Mrs. Marion Monks Chase. On view were many beautiful paintings, featuring landscapes.

The David A. Crawfords' Elizabeth does not often wear a print frock and a picture hat when she watches a horse show, for she usually is riding in the show and so is in riding habit. She spends the summers with her parents at their home in Golf, Ill., and during the winter she often visits Phoenix with her mother and father and brothers, where they all enjoy riding in the desert.

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

By Eleanor Nangle

Athletic Girls May Rival Rocking Chair Brigade in Looking Cool and Fresh.

THERE'S no doubt that it's easier to look cool and fresh if you take your exercise from a rocking chair on the veranda than if you really pitch in with a tennis racket or a set of golf clubs. The rocking chair brigade has a beauty advantage in unruffled hair, noses without shine, and a general bandbox air, that the active sports girl must concede.

But it would be terribly foolish to pass up the fun and the health of good rollicking exercise just because activity in hot weather damages freshness to some extent. A little artful maneuvering on the athletic girl's part will give the fragile flowers some stiff competition.

There are before and after do's and don'ts for the girl who goes in for active sports. Before she goes to the courts or the links or the beach she should bear these things in mind:

Don't Wear Elaborate Makeup for Sports.

Don't wear elaborate makeup. It will wilt and run, and it looks like the very dickens. Use a protective foundation if you will, but leave off eye shadow, mascara, and all but a smidge of rouge. Powder lightly and don't use too much, nor too runny a lipstick.

Don't think for a minute that the fancy hair coiffure will survive, or that it looks appropriate in the first place. Keep the coiffure as simple as possible and if yours is the sort of hair that looks positively awful when it's blown, then by all means take to a turban or some sort of becoming cap or net that restrains it. Girls in love stories always look beautiful with their hair touseled but the effect isn't so good in actuality, we've noticed.

Don't wear a heavy perfume. Have a rub down with a light cologne before you go out, but save your stronger scents for more romantic times and places.

Protect Yourself Against the Risk of a Red Nose.

Don't risk a red nose if you're the fair skinned girl whose nose takes on rosiness in the sun. Put plenty of protective on it, and wear a visor just for good measure. This is particularly important if your nose is inclined to be large.

Don't spoil the attractive effect of casual, easy-to-look-at athletic activity by powdering your nose every five minutes. Tuck a chamois into one pocket, if you like, and use it surreptitiously to remove the shine. This is a pretty good trick, but take your compact along if you insist.

Don't fail to use your favorite deodorant, either cream, liquid or powder, before you go out. This is most important.

And here's the way to make a quick change from a hot and tired woman into a butterfly:

Slather On Face Cream to Counteract Drying.

Take a shower if you possibly can, starting off with warm water and finishing with cold. If the shower isn't possible you simply must use cologne or a body lotion of some sort. Never fail in this. Be sure you tuck some into your sports kit before you leave the house.

If you have time, slather face and neck with rich cream to counteract the drying effect of exposure. Even a few minutes of this treatment will help.

If you've exercised hard and go home afterwards take a warm bath. A good pine oil tossed in will pick up the tired muscles and fortify the spirits.

Watch your makeup if you're going out after a day of active sports. There'll be a rosy tone to your skin and the creamy powder you wore the day before will look the color of flour. Either blend a little sun tan with your regular shade or use a rosy-tan shade.

Give your knuckles and nails a good going-over. They'll have become unbelievably grubby. Remember that you're to be a butterfly now and dinginess is death to romance!

Doll Up Eyes with a Touch of Shadow.

Use a smidge of eye shadow to doll up your eyes. They'll be sparkling after a day out of doors, and shadow is just so much more to the good, provided the quantity is moderate, the shade unerringly right, and the touch light.

A rubdown with cologne is a great help. It makes the skin feel fresher and makes it lightly fragrant, too!

Then go out and make the rocking chair girls look sillier than ever!

Eleanor Nangle, "through her looking glass," sees everything that is new in the fascinating realm of beauty aids, and tells you about them daily in the Chicago Tribune.

Here's a girl who knows the answer to the perplexing problem of looking attractive at all times, whether it be on the tennis courts or on the dance floor. She observes the do's and don'ts of makeup and grooming that keep her fresh and cool looking.

More Women Than Men in Higher Age Bracket in U.S.

STATISTICS reveal that for every three men between 75 and 80 years old in the United States there are four women. For every four men more than 85 years old there are seven women.

The Jewish women of Morocco drape themselves with fine cloth, but do not wear the veil.

Women are better snake charmers than are men. Three Burmese women have charmed their cobras so well that the snakes kiss them.

A FRIEND IN NEED

By Sally Joy Brown.

WE'VE been doing a rushing business in baby buggies for the last few weeks. The offers have been coming in almost fast enough to fill the numerous requests and I thought perhaps some of the donors would like to read an excerpt from the following letter received from one happy mother who has been trying to keep her baby healthy in the dingy basement which serves as her home.

"Dear Miss Brown: I am writing you to thank you for your help in getting me such a lovely baby buggy. I wish that the people that were so kind in giving it to me, let alone bringing it right to the door, could know how thankful and pleased I am. They also brought quilts, pads and clothing. I'm not good at words, but maybe if I tell how I felt they will understand how tickled I am. I was afraid to say much when they brought the buggy, for I was afraid I would burst out and cry. The baby is so happy when I put him in his buggy, he throws his hands in the air and laughs."

Rather effective evidence that buggies should have occupants instead of being relegated to the storeroom when they are no longer needed.

M. L., living on the near north side, writes:

"Again I come to you, hoping that my request will not tax your readers or yourself. Through your kindness in the past I have had much help. I am on direct relief, and I fear there is little hope of my ever being completely independent because of the ailment from which I suffer. While there is a possibility that I will be. I suffer from the intense heat during the summer and as my room is on the top floor it gets like an oven. I have a back porch that, were I to have either a hammock or an army cot, could become my sleeping place on these hot nights.

"I still have my picture developing equipment, with which I earned a bit now and then, but my camera has finally given up the ghost, and I wondered if some one of your readers had an old one of which she was tired. I can develop my own films and print my own pictures, and in this way my time might be of some use again."

The writer's address will be given to any reader interested in supplying Miss L. with either of the articles she requests.

Here's a request which should be easily filled from the scrap bags of readers who do any sewing:

"Dear Miss Brown: I would like to know if any of your readers have some old discarded material or clothing of any kind. I would like to crochet some rag rugs, and have used all the cloth available at present. I would greatly appreciate your help. Mrs. H. K."

"Dear Miss Brown: My husband and I are separated and I am on relief. I expect a child within a short time and have no way of getting clothing for it. I also have a little boy, 3 years old, and would appreciate any clothing I could get for him. The relief is no longer paying rent and my food order has been delayed this month, and I am worried and discouraged. Your help will be appreciated. Mrs. L. L."

The address is on the north side.

A caseworker for a children's hospital wrote to this department in an effort to obtain assistance for little Charlotte, a girl 16 months old, recently released from the institution. The child has a disease which predisposes her to fracture of the bones, and at the present time she is wearing braces on both legs. She will be a burden to her mother, who also is ill, suffering with heart trouble. The family has an extremely small income, but is anxious to care for the small daughter to the best of its ability and does not wish to apply for direct relief. The father is employed, but is at a salary which is too small to provide more than food and actual necessities. The youngster undoubtedly will have to spend most of her time in bed, and her parents will be grateful if some reader can supply one for her. The address is on the south side.

The Duchess of Kent Is London Fashion Leader

Introduces Parisian Style Chic by Favoring the Trim and the Elegant.

By Bettina Bedwell.

PARIS.—[Special.]—The guffaws of raucous laughter that used to greet any reference to English chic are heard no more. Dripping lace and ostrich feather no longer clutter up the royal enclosure at Ascot. English women dress with the same sleek elegance that makes the Parisienne famous. It means something in Paris to be known as London's best dressed, and there is a Famous Forty in the English capital, for the leading Paris dressmakers make collections that go over the channel and the London couturiers also are forces with which to reckon.

When Princess Marina married the duke of Kent, she brought over her Parisian standards of elegance, and her influence on the English idea of dress has been salutary. She was, at once, London's best dressed woman, and she still keeps the lead, though the competition is getting keener every day. Gossip says that the beautiful duchess awakened a burning envy in English hearts at first. She did a big service, however, when she caused British lace and feathers to go into discard.

Smartest of Ensembles Are in Black and White.

Her training in Paris in the art of wearing black has made the present London season of mourning an outstanding one for chic and elegance. Her half-mourning of the summer has put black and white in the front row of smart color combinations. The vogue for black and white printed ensembles achieves a new high in midsummer styles. Unusual designs on printed silks are as characteristic of London as they are of Paris. The duchess of Kent came out in Schiaparelli's unusual printed ensemble, white mushrooms on a field of black silk, and the rest of the smart world of London followed suit with black flower pot designs on white silk, with white postage stamps on black, and like innovations.

The duchess of Kent wears evening gowns that are trim and dashing in line, and has done much to get the English evening picture away from the soft and pretty and fluffy, which has always predominated. Her Molyneux evening ensemble, made of stiff black satin with a tailored jacket and prim, plaited skirt, made style history in London.

Chic, Printed Outfit Has Fitted, Hip Length Cape.

London's best dressed woman wears a printed ensemble for afternoons in English court society, a Schiaparelli model made of black crêpe with white mushrooms printed on it. The hip length cape is fitted neatly around the shoulders, and is trimmed all around with starched and plaited ruffles of white. It has a standing collar with a plaited frill inside, and ties in a bow at the throat. The dress has a bodice that is gathered into the neck, and also above the waistline at the front, and the neckline is finished with a frill of the material, held down by three white mushrooms. The skirt is rather short, and made wide by triple panels at the front. The white lether belt dips to a V at the back, and fastens on two metal hooks at the front.

One of the Molyneux ensembles that the duchess of Kent wears during her half mourning period is a jacket and simple dress made of sheer black crêpe. The full length sash is fashioned of black and and white striped taffeta, and gives a sparkle to the ensemble. Cuffs, and a small collar of the striped taffeta, repeat this note.

Sheer Evening Gowns Have Moulded Lines.

The duchess of Kent even chooses her sheer evening gowns with an eye to a sleek and molded effect. One of her formal evening frocks made by Molyneux comes in sheer black crêpe. The silhouette is slender, with a low cut bodice held by narrow shoulder straps. A streamline movement is achieved by a tucked band around the hipline, making a V in front, and at the back becoming two full flaring panels that gracefully float out to the floor. Evening fashions of this kind are miles ahead of the soft and frilly, in both chic and glamor.

For everyday daytime occasions, the duchess of Kent wears simple dresses. This Molyneux model is made of black, crinkled crêpe silk. The hiplength tailored blouse fastens down the front on black ornamental buttons. The belt is a narrow one of black lether to match the buttons. The skirt is knife plaited, the plaits being stitched down to below the hipline. The line is of the shorter-and-wider skirt type.

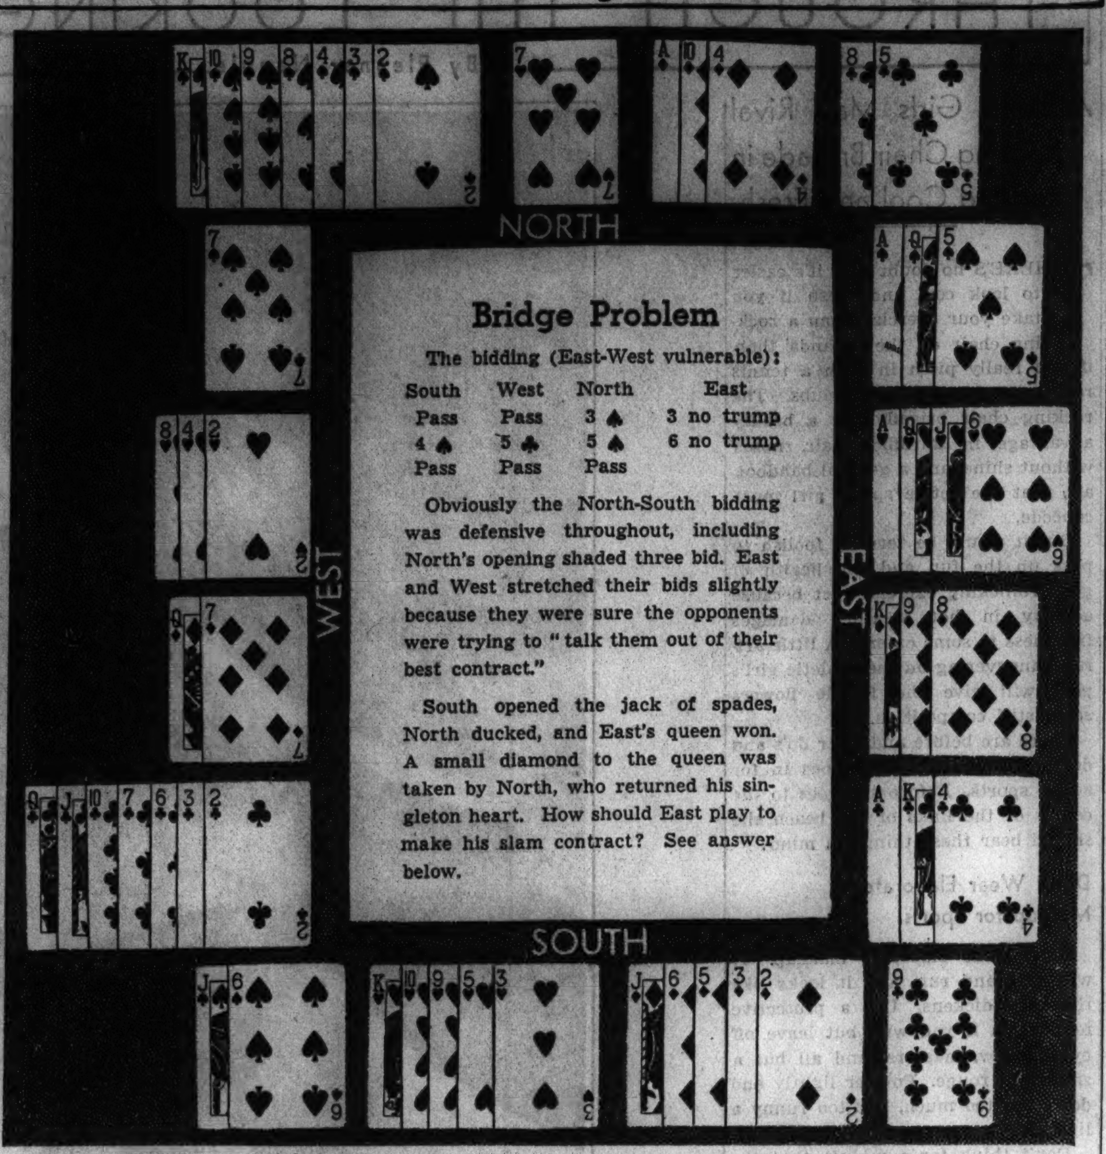
Queen Mary Thought to Be Retiring from Public Life

THE fact that Queen Mary of England is moving out of Buckingham palace to live in Marlborough house is interpreted by many British subjects as heralding her retirement from public life.

Mrs. Amanda Baker Belk, 88 years old, of Charlotte, N. C., has 16 children, 155 grandchildren, 222 great grandchildren, and 22 great great grandchildren.

Contract According to Culbertson



Bridge Problem

The bidding (East-West vulnerable):

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	3 ♠	3 no trump
4 ♠	5 ♣	5 ♠	6 no trump
Pass	Pass	Pass

Obviously the North-South bidding was defensive throughout, including North's opening shaded three bid. East and West stretched their bids slightly because they were sure the opponents were trying to "talk them out of their best contract."

South opened the jack of spades, North ducked, and East's queen won. A small diamond to the queen was taken by North, who returned his singleton heart. How should East play to make his slam contract? See answer below.

ANSWER: East should win heart with ace, cash spade ace, discarding a heart from dummy, and run off dummy's entire club suit. With one club left to play, dummy would also hold the heart eight and the diamond seven. North would have to keep a high spade and on the last club lead would be forced to blank the diamond ten. Thereupon East would discard his spade and keep two diamonds. South would have to keep the high heart and therefore could not guard the diamond suit. Both of East's diamonds consequently would be good. A diamond return by North, after taking the ace, would have broken up this double squeeze.

Bridge Fits In with Summer Pleasures

By Ely Culbertson

THE summer is the ideal season for combining bridge with the lighter, more frivolous pleasures of lake or seashore. What day could be more satisfying, more refreshing than a day devoted to a rousing game of contract, interrupted only by such minor pursuits as an occasional dip, a hasty snack of food, and the capital punishment of marauding mosquitoes?

Bridge organizations recognize the primal urge to get away from it all by providing appropriate settings for warm-weather tournaments. Thus such famed vacation spots as Asbury Park and Atlantic City, N. J.; Conneaut Lake Park, Pa., and a host of other resorts from coast to coast will this month be the Meccas of thousands of contract enthusiasts. While it is true that the major events of most tournaments cater to experts and near-experts, there are always plenty of so-called open events where the average player will find himself in his element.

While on the subject of summer bridge, one of the red-barn summer playhouses in New York state has instituted an idea that has made a tremendous hit in that neighborhood. For two hours, beginning at 1 o'clock before matinées, it conducts a progressive or party bridge game, the curtain of the current play going up at 3. I am told that the ladies especially are enthusiastic about the feature (for which there is no extra charge), and that it has added enormously to the theater's success. Other theater managers please note!

It is a good thing to look around every once in a while when you're playing bridge. Lift your eyes from cards and spots and look at the people in the game.

Remember that every person is a hodge-podge of hopes and fears and that only one in a hundred has any real control of his emotional complexes. Play upon avarice by luring your opponents to a bad contract; then sharpen the ax! Play upon fear by bold bidding and daring play. You have no idea of how much "murder" you can get away with against a timid player!

And when you think it time to put over a fast one, stop and think. Maybe a slow one would be better. In other words, adjust your deceptive bids and plays to the mental level of the opponents. What would work against a dub might be hopeless against an expert, and vice versa.

Considerations like these made West's second lead in the hand below the best possible play.

♠ A K 10 8
♥ J 10 8
♦ J 10 4
♣ K 3 2

WEST
♠ Q 7 4 2
♥ 7 4
♣ A Q 9 8 5
♦ 7 3

EAST
♠ J 9 5
♥ K Q 9 6 2
♦ 8 5
♣ J 10 4

SOUTH
♠ 6 3
♥ A 5 3
♦ A K Q 9 6 2
♣ 7 6

The bidding (neither side vulnerable):

North	East	South	West
1 ♣*	Pass	1 ♦	Pass
1 ♠†	Pass	3 N. T.‡ (final bid)

*The correct bid under the principle of preparedness. If North begins with one spade he will have no safe rebid after his partner responds in any other suit. The hand is much too rich in intermediate cards to warant a pass.

†Now North shows his spade suit safely at the level of one. The danger is negligible that South will take the earlier bid too seriously.

‡South can practically guarantee seven winners of his own. North's bids have promised something in the black suits, even though the club suit need not be strictly biddable.

West considered for a moment the advisability of a heart lead. But it was hardly likely that his partner could establish and run the hearts with a hand not good enough for a simple overcall after North's opening club bid. The club suit seemed to present the best chance, so West opened the eight—fourth highest.

South saw at a glance that nine tricks were there for the taking—as soon as he got the lead. But that club suit looked dangerous. There was no danger if the suit broke four-four, but any other split might make trouble for him. It was safe, at any rate, to duck the first time. If East had to win, the contract was home.

But East could see no point in covering the eight. He could not be sure that the lead was fourth best, but could see no gain in covering if it was not. West therefore won the first trick with the eight.

With the utmost sang-froid he next pitched out the queen of clubs. He knew that East had the jack and ten of clubs and also that South was worried about the location of the ace. The lead of the queen would make it appear that West hoped for a cover by the king. And West knew that South would not think, but would be afraid to do what West apparently wanted.

South looked despairingly at the queen of clubs. Without stopping to think, he decided East must have the ace. If he had started with only three clubs the suit would be blocked by a failure to put up the king. Congratulating himself on his perspicacity, therefore, South ducked. And West calmly ran the rest of the suit.

He knew that his lead would not have worked against an expert, but was too polite to point that out to South. An expert would have realized that if East had the club ace, West had led the club eight from Q J 9 8 or Q 10 9 8—from either of which the opening lead would have been a different card. The ace would have been marked in West's hand and the king of clubs would have been played without hesitation.

Today's Questions

Question: Will you kindly give the proper bidding of the following North and South hands? Both sides vulnerable, but the opponents passed throughout.

NORTH	SOUTH
♠ K Q 9 5	♠ 2
♥ A 10 7 4 3	♥ Q J 6
♦ A K 3	♦ J 10 9 7 4 2
♣ 5	♣ K 6 3

Answer: The correct bidding is as follows:

NORTH	SOUTH
1 heart	2 hearts
2 spades	3 diamonds
4 hearts	Pass

Question: Is it correct for dummy to put down his trumps before the opening lead has been made?

Answer: There is no reason for dummy to expose a single card before the opening lead has been made. To put down your trumps is to help the leader and injure yourself and partner. It is not incorrect; you are permitted to show all of your cards. But there is no point in helping the opponents.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, July 27.

Whenever watering becomes necessary it should be thorough, that is, the water should soak the ground for at least four inches or more. Watering twice each week should suffice for average conditions. Fruiting trees should not be allowed to die from lack of moisture plus the strength it takes to develop the fruits. The fruit may appear to be all that is desired, but unless abundant water is given after effects are certain. Mulching the ground is a good practice in conserving moisture.

Tuesday, July 28.

Make a special effort to rid the lawn of crab grass. It is the weed that has broad, light green foliage, and at present appears as about the most luxurious plant on the lawn. It sends out jointed stems that will soon be in seed. The method of handling is to rake the crab grass up until the joints stand upright, and then mow. Collect the cut portions and put in the compost heap. By raking a few times and mowing the pest will soon disappear. Do not cut the lawn as close during dry weather as when the season is more moist. The peonies may be given an application of plant food at this time, such as a complete commercial food or super phosphate. No more than two trowelsful are necessary to a plant.

Wednesday, July 29.

Watch for red spiders on evergreens. Their presence is indicated by a whitish or grayish appearance of the foliage. Spray all parts of the plants as a control because red spiders will not develop in moist conditions. Shorten the growing buds on evergreens at this time to keep the plants in bounds. Columbines and other perennials may be sown now. Water with a fine hose, after placing a covering of burlap over the surface. This will keep the soil moist, and a more uniform germination will result. Keep flower beds edged with a spade. Nothing aids the appearance of a bed as much as edging.

Thursday, July 30.

If water lilies are to be used as cut flowers, take a medicine dropper and drop a little melted paraffin into the center of each flower. It is time to make out the orders for spring flowering bulbs, such as the madonna lily, crocus, tulips, narcissus, grape hyacinth, and roots like the peony. Sow hollyhock seeds as soon as ripe, and thin out the plants when they have developed sufficiently. Try some of the double varieties for they are delightful. Use them as backgrounds along the alley or fence. To obtain clean bunches of grapes free from insect attack sack the bunches with paper sacks.

Friday, July 31.

Use hellebore on currants that are in fruit. The poison is not harmful to human beings. The anchusas may be increased from two inch pieces of the roots. Fresh seed of delphinium will germinate better than old seed. Sow as soon as the seed can be procured. Hardy pinks, gaillardia, and sweet William may also be sown.

Saturday, Aug. 1.

Give the house plants that are plunged in the garden copious amounts of water for they dry out quickly and must not be allowed to suffer. A bit of plant food applied at intervals of about two weeks will encourage good growth. Keep window boxes well watered for they dry out rapidly. Food should be given them occasionally. Liquid manures are excellent for them. Layering the ends of the blackberry bushes is an excellent way to obtain new plants. Sow cover crops like rye, crimson clover, buckwheat, millet, and vetch as soon as the ground is ready.

New Wallpaper Is Both Washable and Attractive

A WELL known manufacturer of wallpapers has recently brought out an entirely new paper which can be washed with soap and hot or cold water. If necessary, it may be even scrubbed. To prove its practical points, a demonstrator smeared jam, butter, city dirt, and ink on some of the paper, and then scrubbed them off without difficulty.

In appearance this paper looks like any wallpaper. It has no glaze. It is made of a paper base, a layer of cellulose, and special cellulose colors. During the process of making it is baked at 140 degrees Fahrenheit.

At the present the selection of patterns is limited, but some plain, extremely charming colors are available. This paper is ideal for kitchens, bathrooms, halls, and nurseries. It is sold by a large Chicago department store.

Simple Play Ensemble for Youngsters Is Easily and Inexpensively Made.

By Clotilde.

BY THIS stage of the summer most mothers are viewing their youngsters' play wardrobe with alarm. The supply of sun suits which, at the beginning of the summer, seemed ample, is beginning to show definite signs of wear. A large investment of time and money is, indeed, not to be considered in replenishing the stock of play attire, and, for this reason alone, the pattern illustrated today is invaluable. Not only is it an inexpensive and simple costume to sew, but it also is designed along lines which make laundering and dressing exceedingly easy.

The outfit consists of a sun suit and accompanying frock. The play suit is easily made. The straps are sewed and then attached to the brief and simply tailored French panties. Merely stitch waistband and shoulder straps, that cross in the back, to the one-piece panties which open at each side.

The dress has cool, slightly flared little sleeves. The frock is cut in one piece, with an inset in the front which has gathered fulness for softness. The only trimming is bias binding which one may purchase by the yard, all ready made.

The dress may match the sun suit, since it is worn over it, or contrast. The original model made from this pattern is created in cotton broadcloth in yellow and blue print, with the bias binding in blue.

Sheer seersucker, percale prints, chambray, piqué, patterned gingham, and dotted dimity are other attractive fabrics for this outfit.

The pattern may be used for separate sun suits and dresses, if you choose.

There are plenty of play days ahead for the youngest set, and this outfit will be exceedingly handy. Make several versions of it in different fabrics.

Style No. 2855 is designed for sizes 2, 4, and 6 years, and includes patterns for both garments. Size 4 requires ⅞ yard of 39 inch material for the sun suit, and 1¼ yards of 39 inch material for the dress, with 1⅞ yards of bias binding.

Where Shopping Plans Begin

Much quicker and less tiresome than shopping without a plan is to know before you start where to find the best clothes for the money. Women who get the most out of their dress dollars watch the women's apparel advertising in the Chicago Tribune every day. Here leading shops and stores announce their major style and value events. Retailers of women's apparel place more advertising in the Tribune than they place in any three other Chicago newspapers combined.

Dissatisfied Child Often Is Spoiled

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

Chronic Discontent May Be Traced to Physical and Mental Disturbances

WHAT is wrong with the discontented or dissatisfied child?

As soon as I attempt to answer the question, I begin to have qualms. For it becomes too big a subject to deal with in a mere thousand words if one strays beyond the dissatisfied and discontented child, and includes the actually unhappy one. To draw an arbitrary line between the two is, of course, rather difficult, but, nevertheless, necessary to present a common problem.

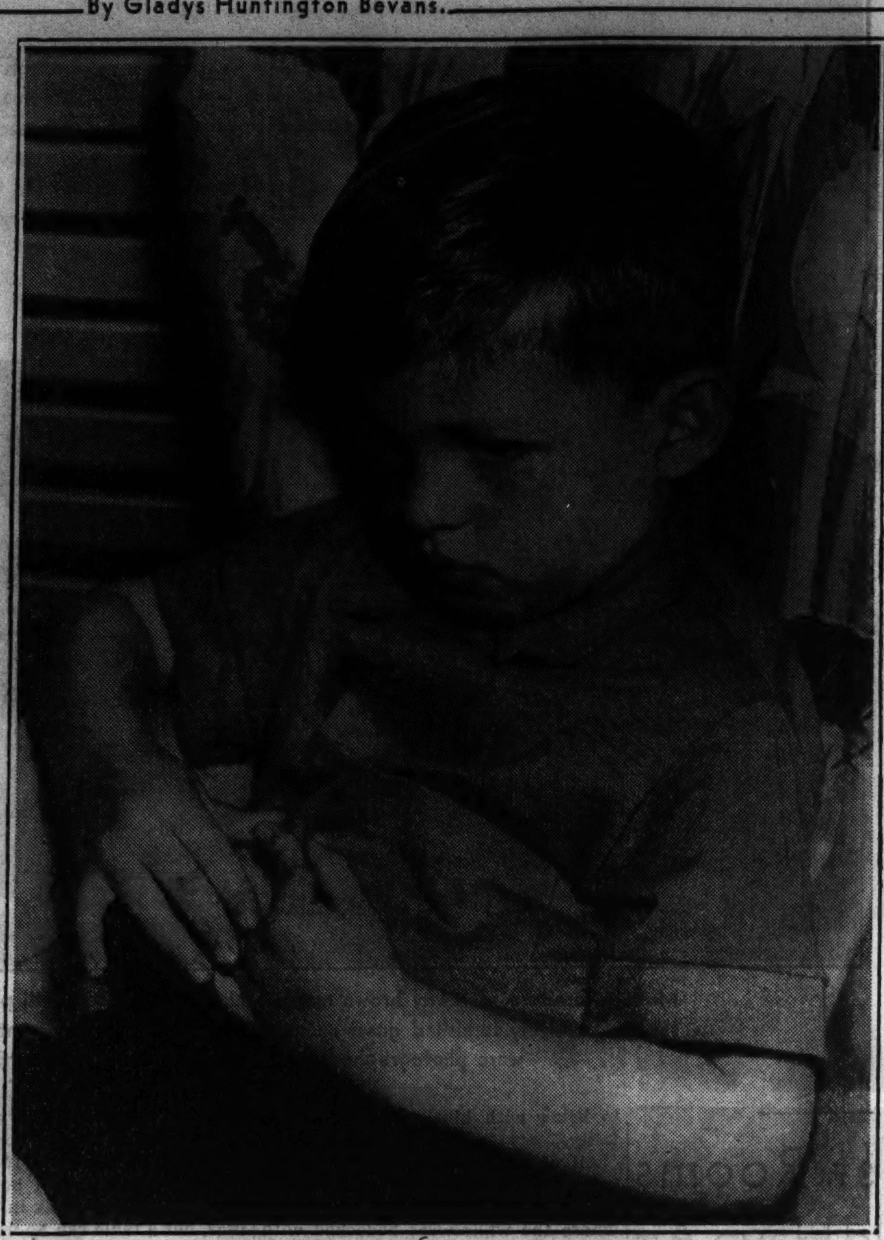
The mother who writes to me may have a little girl of 4 or 6, or an older boy or girl.

"She never seems to play happily with her toys, and she never is interested in anything for any length of time," is one phase of dissatisfaction.

"My daughter always has a discontented expression on her face and nothing pleases here," is another.

"No matter how many toys my little girl gets, she wants everything she sees."

"My boy seems so dissatisfied with everything—nothing pleases him—and he is so selfish."



"My boy seems so dissatisfied with everything—nothing pleases him."

Child's Dissatisfaction Often Quite Reasonable.

"My son of 9 seems unhappy. He never used to cry, but lately he bursts into tears and I can't seem to find any reason for his strange behavior."

Well, there is much food for thought. And the reasons we'll see easily, or may have to search for, even would apply to many grownup cases of dissatisfaction. Just what is responsible for the short lived interest in play, the pouts, the aimlessness, the tears?

The child who is dissatisfied with everything she receives simply may be too much indulged. Everybody lavishes things on her, and she is surfeited with material possessions. There's an edge to desire when you don't have quite all you want. Taking away some of her toys or giving them to less fortunate children might be wholesome. It would have to be done in the right way, not in a heart rending way, and not in a patronizing or "we'll give them to the poor children" sort of way.

A short lived interest in play, followed by "what shall I do now, mother?" may be due to one of several causes. An excess of attention from a whole family of adoring grownups—some one always ready to amuse or entertain a child—helps to destroy his play initiative. It keeps him from developing the power of concentration that makes a pile of blocks or a doll house provide hours of satisfaction.

Tactful Cooperation of Grownups Is Necessary.

To correct this a mother has to enlist the tactful coöperation of the other adoring grownups, a change in tactics mustn't cause him to feel neglected. A prescription for "wholesome neglect" will be sent upon request.

The child who seems to be growing selfish or self-centered, often is helped by the companionship of other children. She gains in this way a give and take, a live and let live attitude.

Also, she should learn how to help around the house—really help. And surely she can be encouraged to make birthday gifts, and save money to buy Christmas presents for those she loves. Likewise, if her grownups are considerate, she too will learn little, thoughtful ways. So much for what we might call the surface aspects of childish discontent and dissatisfaction.

Chronic discontent may have deeper causes.

One often not sufficiently reckoned with is a child's physical condition.

The child who is below par, who is constantly fatigued or undernourished, lacks the vitality which makes for alertness of interest and zest for play.

Where there is the kind of actual ill health which still allows a patient to be "sick on his feet," the effect on his mental and emotional state often is dicounted by his parents. I believe doctors should help in such cases by explaining to a mother that depression, nervousness, and uneveness of temper may accompany either the illness or the long convalescence from it. When this is so, all a mother can do is to overlook small faults as much as possible, and provide the child with books and toys and craft materials. Time is the chief healer of discontent in these cases. In general, physical causes of discontent must be checked.

Emotional Upheavals May Be Cause of Discontent.

But if these don't exist, it may be found that the roots of a child's dissatisfaction strike deep into his emotional life. We who have left our childhood behind, those of us so fortunate that our early years were happy ones, don't realize the depths of a child's feeling, or his capacity for grief and pain. I know of several cases where, after several years had passed, the parents realized the cause of their children's discontent, unhappiness, frequent unaccountable tears.

In one instance the family had to leave the home in which the child had been born. The maid and nurse and beloved family friend—all in one—was forced to go elsewhere. A move was made to a strange and not desirable neighborhood. Such an upheaval scarcely brought a word to the surface, but the symptoms I have described began to appear.

In another case, with an older child, a deep dissatisfaction and extreme boredom with a school which was uncongenial in its atmosphere and personnel produced a generally unhappy attitude at home, an attitude most distressing to the parents. They did not trace the cause, but a change of schools was accompanied by an almost dazzling and continuous state of happiness and contentment.

Frequently I've seen something unsatisfactory in the relationship between a child and his parents produce the effect about which we're talking.

He is, in brief, a fairly good guide to go by, regardless of a youngster's age. If your child often is discontented or unhappy, try the practical treatments suggested.

Among the simpler remedies is the one I call "Wholesome Neglect Often Is Cure for Undesirable Behavior." A fully written leaflet on this subject will be sent out on receipt of a large, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request.

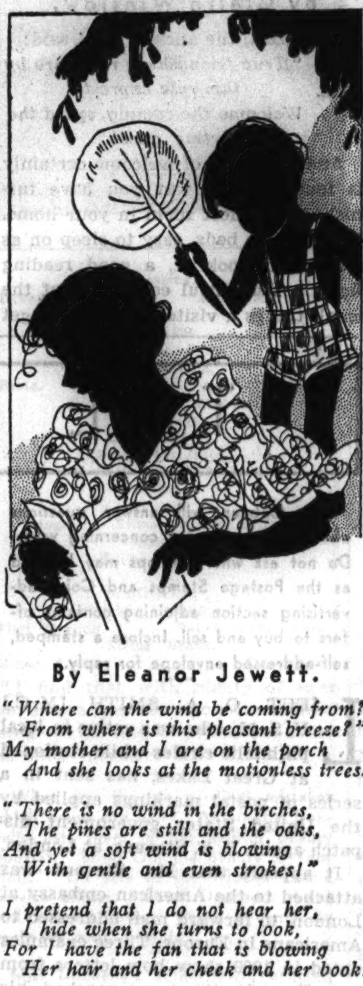
A Summer Game



By Eleanor Jewett.

"Where can the wind be coming from?
From where is this pleasant breeze?"
My mother and I are on the porch
And she looks at the motionless trees.

"There is no wind in the birches,
The pines are still and the oaks,
And yet a soft wind is blowing
With gentle and even strokes!"

I pretend that I do not hear her,
I hide when she turns to look,
For I have the fan that is blowing
Her hair and her cheek and her book.

I am her breeze in summer,
Her wind-without-any-name,
And I DON'T think she knows I am fanning—
Which makes the point of the game!

Sally Plans a Party to See Cowboy Film

Want to See Grand Show, Boys and Girls? Write Your Letters Early.

By Sally Joy Brown.

ALL you kids who are cowboy crazy are going to love our next party!

I've been looking around for just the right sort of movie for you youngsters, and Mr. Herzoff of Balaban and Katz just told me about one that's practically perfect. The program soon to open at the Chicago theater has just been made to order for children!

On Aug. 6 I'm going to take fifty boys and fifty girls to see a brand new movie, "Rhythm on the Range," featuring Bing Crosby, the famous crooner, and Bob Burns, the big bazooka man. It's a musical film, laid in the west, with the two popular radio stars cast as cowboys. It's full of lots of riding and roping, and good old cowboy music. Pretty Frances Farmer and a new comedienne, Martha Raye, who claims to have a bigger mouth than Joe E. Brown, are also in the picture.

In addition to the film there will be a huge stage show, featuring Maj. Bowes' newest unit of amateurs, plus a professional dance band.

Explain Why You Want to Attend Party.

Think you'd like to join our party and see this show with me? Well, all you have to do is convince me you'd enjoy yourself thoroughly, and you have a pretty good chance of winning an invitation. You see, I want all interested boys and girls to write a letter, explaining why they think they'd like this party, and judging from the notes received, I'm going to select 100 youngsters to be my guests.

It's not a bit hard, and there are just three things you must remember about your letter. Of course, you must write it yourself—no fair having mother or big brother do it for you. You must remember to include your name, address, and age, and your note must be mailed so that it will reach me by Thursday morning at the very latest. Isn't that easy?

I'll tell you more about our party tomorrow, but I think you'd better get to work on your letter right away, if you think you'd like an invitation. The address is just Sally Joy Brown, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Chicago.

Many Letters for Circus Invitations.

Well, all the youngsters who find their names listed here today may well be proud of themselves, because competition for invitations to our circus party on July 30 was pretty stiff. We'll have a grand time next Thursday, and now all you children have to do is be on the watch for the personal invitations I'm mailing to you.

It's too bad we can't take all the youngsters who wrote in, but there are lots of good parties planned for the future—so if you're not listed with the winners today perk up and see if you can't come to see Bing with me!

Fruit Plates Are Delicious Summer Fare

Various Combinations That Make Attractive Warm Weather Specials Listed.

By Mary Meade.

YES, it was pretty cold last winter. The snow was deep and you got your ears nipped once. . . . You almost had begun to feel cool just thinking these thoughts when a letter came from back home.

"The crops are burned up . . . cattle are dying. The heat is terrific. You don't know how lucky you are to be in a cool place!"

This was the last straw. You knew you must either go mad at once or climb right into the refrigerator!

Choosing this last alternative as the better, what did you find when you threw open the door? If you were lucky you found an ice cold fruit and melon plate and promptly fell to, forgetting your perspiring frenzy.

This Is an Idea for Ice Cold Melon Plate.

This is what I hope you found on that plate: first a cross-section of red watermelon. On top of it a ring cut from a cantaloupe. In the center of the ring, half a fresh peach, and scattered about over the whole work of art, fresh, sweet cherries. The plate looked so beautiful it almost seemed a shame to destroy it!

When the weather gets hot, it's a good idea to keep the refrigerator heavily laden with fresh fruits of all kinds. Then you have the makings of an icy drink, whenever you need it, or for a fruit and melon plate such as the one we've been discussing. And there's nothing like either to put new life into you!

Even nicer than the fresh peach center on the fruit and melon plate is a huge dipperful of lemon ice or raspberry sherbet. This is a bridge club special which will make your reputation as a hostess.

Here's Another Fruit Dish that's Delicious.

Another fruit plate special we know about is an old idea turning up in a new dress. You have probably served "grape cluster" salad, covering a pear half with cream cheese, and then making your cluster of grapes by sticking halves of white grapes thickly over the cheese coating. The salad I am mentioning here is even prettier, for it's much more colorful. You use the same idea, substituting peaches for the pears, and cherries for the grapes. Place each cherry cluster on a bed of lettuce and add just a tiny bit of mayonnaise.

While we're talking about fresh peaches, here's another idea for an attractive peach dish, dessert or salad, as you prefer. Place three peeled peach halves on a dessert or salad plate, fill the centers with chilled red or black raspberries and garnish with a sprig of mint. If the fruit is for dessert, sugar the peach halves and also the berries. If for salad, add a bit of dressing.

Frozen Fruit Salad Another Hot Weather Special.

A frozen fruit salad is another refrigerator special for hot days. Here is our favorite recipe for fruit salad with a cream cheese base. It is the simplest thing in the world to alter the recipe to suit your own preferences. For instance, vary the fruits, add them in larger amounts, or add dates, more nuts or marshmallows. However, the salad is very good made just as it is given.

FROZEN FRUIT SALAD.

1 package cream cheese
2 tablespoons mayonnaise
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 bananas, sieved
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup finely cut pineapple
½ cup finely cut large sweet cherries
¼ cup chopped almonds
1 cup whipping cream

Mix the mayonaise, cream cheese and lemon juice to a paste, and add salt and sieved bananas. Whip cream until thick but not stiff, and add pineapple, cherries and nuts. Fold into first mixture. Pour into freezing tray of refrigerator and freeze.

You May Learn About Sixteen Frozen Salads.

By the way, if you'd like our booklet "Sixteen Refrigerator Frozen Salads," containing more ideas along this line, it may be obtained from this department for five cents.

To give you just one more parting cool thought, we submit this recipe for a cold drink using marshmallows. No, don't toss it aside thinking that a marshmallow drink would be too sickeningly sweet. This one isn't. It's deliciously good.

FROSTY MALLOWADE.

18 marshmallows
1 cup boiling water
1½ cups chilled orange juice
⅓ cup lemon juice
½ cup pineapple juice
1 cup ice water
Ice cubes

Pour boiling water over marshmallows and heat over low flame until the marshmallows are melted. Remove from fire and cool. Add fruit juices, ice water and ice cubes. Blend well, chill and serve when very cold.

Guest Rooms Should Have Air of Hospitality

By Claire Winslow.

HOMER, the ancient bard, said:

> "True friendship's rules are by this rule exprest, > Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest."

And your idea of welcome certainly is found in the way you have furnished the guest room in your home. Comfortable beds, easy to sleep on as well as to look at, a good reading light, a thoughtful equipment of the small things a visitor is apt to forget to bring with him, spell real hospitality.

All of us, at some time or other, have been housed in a room where the mattresses were like boards, where the walls were bedecked with family photographs of the Gibson girl era, where there were not enough blankets because the owners of the house happened to think every one should be as Spartan as themselves. And we have not relished the thought of a return to that roof tree.

Comfortable and Sufficient Equipment Most Important.

What should a guest room have, then, to spell "welcome" to one's friends? First of all, it should boast of good springs and mattresses. Even more important than the bed itself is this matter of equipment. Second, there should be enough covers. Even in summer more than one blanket is occasionally needed. Third, the pillows should be a happy medium between hard and soft.

A good reading light is an essential, too. The lamp need not be costly, but it should be efficient. If the budget is slender, it may not be possible to include a writing desk in the furnishings, but a table can be made to serve the purpose if it is fitted with a desk set, a lamp, pens, and inks, and writing paper, envelopes, and stamps.

A real necessity is a pair of racks for guests' luggage. Otherwise the overnight guest must unpack her suitcase on the floor, as she won't put it on a chair if she is considerate of furniture.

Small Items Provide Home Comforts for the Guest.

In a bureau drawer, or on a shelf in the closet, it is a happy thought to provide the following items: A small sewing kit, a cake of unscented soap, hair pins, adhesive tape, scissors, razor blades, a tiny jar of cold cream [you can get one at the dime store], paper tissues.

Every guest room should have a clock of its own, too. And cigarets, matches, and ash trays. Four or five books—fiction, biography, detective yarns, and travel tales will be appreciated, as well.

There should be at least one comfortable armchair in the room. Preferably, two.

The photograph today shows some simple, inexpensive modern maple furniture that would be excellent in the guest room of a small home. The finish is a tawny, mellow brown tone that is most pleasing. The bedspreads are washable. A modern plaid rug in diamond design is on the floor. The walls are painted light yellow.

"Furnishing Your Home on a Modest Budget," a new booklet by Claire Winslow, tells how to have attractive rooms without running up large bills. It is full of helpful suggestions. Price, 5 cents by mail, 3 cents at the Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street and Tribune Tower lobby.

THE STAMP COLLECTOR

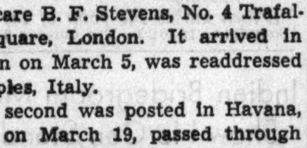
By Richard McP. Cabeen

Mr. Cabeen will answer questions about stamps, except concerning value. Do not ask where stamps may be sold as the Postage Stamps and Coins advertising section adjoining contains offers to buy and sell. Inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

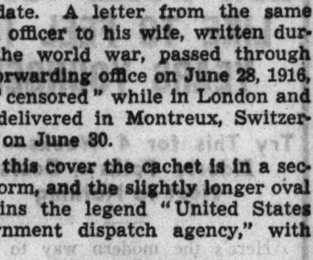
LIEUT. O. A. SMITH [M. C.] U. S. N., who was active in local philatelic circles while stationed at Great Lakes, has sent in a series of postal markings applied by the United States government dispatch agent, B. F. Stevens, at London.

It appears that Mr. Stevens was attached to the American embassy at London, to forward mail addressed to Americans in Europe. Three examples dated in 1900 show how letters from an officer in the navy reached his wife, touring in Europe. The first was posted in Frederiksted, D. W. I., on Feb. 15, 1900, and addressed to his wife, care B. F. Stevens, No. 4 Trafalgar square, London. It arrived in London on March 5, was readdressed to Naples, Italy.

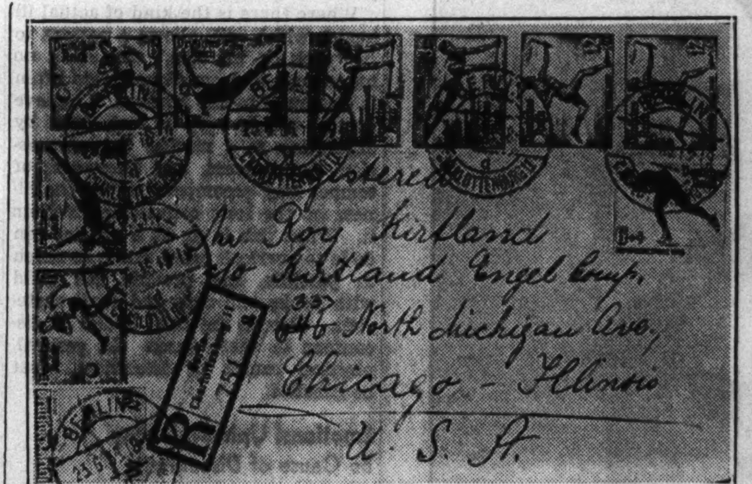
The second was posted in Havana, Cuba, on March 19, passed through Mr. Stevens' office on April 2, and was delivered in Florence, Italy. The third was posted at Fortress Monroe, Va., on April 3, reached London on April 14, and was reconsigned to Florence, Italy. The cachet placed on these letters is a large oval containing the words "United States dispatch agent," and within an inner oval, "B. F. Stevens, London," and the date. A letter from the same naval officer to his wife, written during the world war, passed through the forwarding office on June 28, 1916, was "censored" while in London and was delivered in Montreux, Switzerland, on June 30.



On this cover the cachet is in a second form, and the slightly longer oval contains the legend "United States government dispatch agency," with the date and the word "London," within the inner oval. The name of Mr. Stevens does not appear, but other examples may show it, for the spacing of the lines in the one examined indicates that space was provided for the name, and it may have been removed.



A 3 cent stamp will be issued on Aug. 26 to honor Susan B. Anthony, pioneer leader in the movement for woman suffrage. The date selected for the first day sale is the sixteenth anniversary of the proclamation ratifying the nineteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States. The stamp will show a portrait of Miss Anthony and will have first day sale at Washington, D. C.



This cover, showing the German Olympic issue, together with the air mail stamp commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Lufthansa, is shown through the kindness of R. M. Kirtland of Chicago.

Stamp Notes.

Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, as our cataloguers have it, is now an Italian colony for stamp collectors. Following the capture of Addis Ababa, the remaining stocks of Ethiopian stamps were overprinted in Italian, and now a distinctive issue has made its appearance. These stamps show a portrait of Victor Emmanuel of Italy, with the inscriptions "Ethiopia" at the top, and "Poste Coloniale Italiane," at the bottom.

The total printing of Tipex souvenir sheets amounts to 2,859,000 blocks, according to the Washington Post. This figure does not include copies from the demonstration plate numbered 21556, which was printed from at the exposition in New York, as a part of the exhibit of the bureau of engraving and printing. It was announced by the post office department that all stamps printed from this plate would be returned to Washington for destruction.

The Central Federation of Stamp Clubs will meet in the Chicago room, Central Y. M. C. A., on La Salle street, at 8 p. m. Friday, July 31.

Cachets and Covers.

The Westmont Cover club's series of presidential cachets will honor Herbert Hoover on Aug. 10, mailed at West Branch, Ia., and Benjamin Harrison on Aug. 20, mailed from North Bend, O. Use standard size envelopes, stamped and addressed and include 1 cent per cover for forwarding. Send covers at least seven days before event, to Francis W. Bloch, 5439 Baywood street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

An unusual cachet will mark the 100th anniversary of the coming of the first white man to Lake Mills, Wis. This cachet will show a view of the ancient site of Aztalan, now under the city of Lake Mills, whence the Aztecs are believed to have migrated to Mexico some 800 years ago. The cachet is taken from Judge N. F. Hyer's survey of the site made in 1837. Send covers stamped, addressed, and fully prepaid to the Rev. J. Martin Raasch, Lake Mills, Wis., before Aug. 15.

William Grabel, director, Postage Stamp Traders, 10660 Thrush avenue, Cleveland, O., will supply the official cachet of the Great Lakes exposition at ½ cent per cover. Send stamped and addressed covers ready to go. Other cachets will be provided on national anniversaries. Send for list.

Bloomington, Ill., will become a regular stop on the Chicago-New Orleans route of the Chicago and Southern Air Lines, Inc., as soon as improvements at the airport are completed. George Houchin, 405 E. Washington street, Bloomington, Ill., will cachet covers from that city, if they are addressed, unstuffed and unsealed and prepaid with airmail postage. Earl J. Wilson, 1723 Orchard street, Chicago, will cachet covers for mailing from Chicago and New Orleans, if the same instructions are followed. Send covers at once. Commemoratives on wrappers appreciated.

H. S. Groat, 110 Madison street, Seattle, Wash., will apply a cachet from America's Last Frontier early in August. Mr. Groat states that the cover will come down from the "frontier" by pack mule, motor boat, auto truck, and railroad with final delivery by airmail. Send 6¾ size covers at once, addressed, unsealed, and unstuffed, and franked with airmail postage, with 1 cent per cover for forwarding.

Coin Notes.

L. M. Hoffecker, P. O. Box 75, El Paso, Tex., has been appointed distributor for the commemorative half dollars which will be issued soon to mark the centennial of Elgin, Ill. Detailed information may be obtained from Mr. Hoffecker.

Sylvia Sidney Gives a Diet to Keep Slim

Gardening and Swimming Her Exercises, Says Trim, Lovely Young Actress.

By Antoinette Donnelly.

"COLD cream and complexion lotions and the thousands of beauty preparations that one finds in any cosmetic shop or department store may work with some women, but I'm a firm believer in plain soap and water and a complexion brush," says Sylvia Sidney, screen star.

"I suppose that every woman has her favorite cream or lotion which she claims will do wonders for the complexion, erase all blemishes, and make her look ten years younger, but I'm convinced that no matter what else you use, the first prerequisite for a good complexion is a good hard scrubbing with soap and water to cleanse the skin and insure a healthy circulation.

"The first job is to get the right kind of a complexion brush. It should be stiff enough to leave a fresh, exhilarated feeling, but not so stiff that it seems to scratch. Two or three minutes of good hard scrubbing in the morning and the evening will make it easier to withstand the ravages of summer motoring, tennis playing in the hot sun, and all the added exposure of summer days spent in the outdoors," says Miss Sidney.

Cleanse Face Thoroughly Before Applying Cosmetics.

"The thing to be careful about is not to leave any trace of soap on your face. A lavish rinsing first with warm [not hot] water, and then with cold water, and a careful drying with a not too smooth towel, leave you ready to apply cosmetics."

Gardening and swimming are Sylvia Sidney's formulæ for keeping fit and she won't let anything interfere with either of them.

"But when I say gardening I don't mean stepping out in an organdy frock with a pair of scissors to cut flowers and then arrange them in vases. That's not gardening, it's interior decorating, and it's no more exercise than ping-pong," protests Miss Sidney. "The kind of gardening that I'm talking about needs a pair of old overalls and a good old-fashioned set of tools; a trowel and a hoe and a rake.

Gardening Is as Good As Setting Up Exercises.

"There's nothing more invigorating than getting out before breakfast, even if it's only for half an hour, and pulling out weeds, raking away stones, and doing some heavy hoeing. It's wonderful for arm and spine muscles. I admit you get stiff if you do it only once in a while, but if you do it every day, you'll find that gardening has it all over any setting up exercises for keeping your weight down, and giving you the vitality to start the day off—and it's much more fun.

"No, I'm not sorry that I cut my hair," said Miss Sidney, who appears in her latest picture with her hair bobbed for the first time, "although I admit that I cried like Jo in 'Little Women' right after it was cut."

"It's so much easier to manage now," she said, "No more hairpins and stray ends coming out in the midst of work. All I do is run a comb with a tiny bit of water through my hair and its stays in place for hours. I do think that it's easier to appear neat with bobbed hair than with long.

Bobbed Hair Makes Coiffure Easy Problem.

"I remember trying to rack my brains to think of new coiffures while my hair was long and I found that there were definite limits to ways of fixing long hair. You always came back to the fact that you had to have some sort of knot in back. I think that women always should be experimenting with new coiffures, just as they experiment with new dress styles, and its easier to vary your coiffure wher your hair is bobbed."

If you're not trying to get thin, but only to keep thin, the way to do it is to eat moderately at each meal rather than to try to be drastic about any of them, is the opinion of Miss Sidney. "It's ridiculous to cut out breakfasts, and then find you're simply starving by lunch time. I wouldn't miss breakfasts for the world, but my particular rule is no bread at any time."

Miss Sidney believes that if you eat sensibly at each meal and cut out all eating between meals you won't have to let your dress seams out.

Here are means for three days, illustrating her diet:

BREAKFAST.
Cantaloupe.
Fresh Berries with Top Milk.

DINNER.

SYLVIA RECOMMENDS SOAP AND WATER FOR COMPLEXION

At right: "I'm a firm believer in plain soap and water and a complexion brush," says lovely Sylvia Sidney, screen star, whose exquisite skin is something about which to boast. Sylvia is convinced that "no matter what else you use, the first prerequisite of a good complexion is a good hard scrubbing to cleanse the skin and insure a healthy circulation.

Plain Double Service Furniture Ideal for Small Apartment

THE living room in the average small city apartment is not spacious, so the clever amateur decorator chooses her furniture with care, avoiding large, overstuffed pieces and a clutter of accessories. If she can get a chest of drawers that is also writing desk, she is in luck.

One Chicago department store is showing such an item. Of bleached maple [almost white in tone], it is of modern design, extremely simple, with drawer pulls made like long, horizontal bars. The top drawer may be pulled out and used for letter writing, as it is furnished with pigeon holes, has a wide, flat surface, and a front panel that may be dropped so that it, too, lies flat. The nice feature about this good looking piece of furniture is that it is not expensive.

Kansas City Woman Heads Force of 50 Air Hostesses

MISS RUTH KATHRYN RHODES of Kansas City, Mo., chief air hostess of the Transcontinental and Western airline, directs a force of fifty girls who serve as air hostesses on the passenger fleet of the line.

Miss Agnes Harrigan, keeper of the lighthouse in the Lloyd Harbor, Long Island, N. Y., has lived alone for 22 years.

Ishbel MacDonald, daughter of the former prime minister of Great Britain and former official hostess at No. 10 Downing street in London, plans to demonstrate her ability at running a country hotel at Speen, Buckinghamshire.

Women spent more than three-fourths of the money received by department stores in London, England, in the last twelve months.

Grads Think $3,000 a Year Marrying Wage

TODAY'S graduates believe that $3,000 a year is the minimum income on which marriage should be undertaken, the results of a June graduation survey, just completed by a Minneapolis life insurance company show. Five hundred and twenty-three June graduates from the universities of Chicago, New York, and Minnesota answered the questionnaires.

Men and women agreed approximately as to the minimum income on which they would be willing to marry. The men's figures averaged $2,970 as the annual salary necessary, and the women's ideas averaged $2,850.

Men and Women Differ on Question of Working Wives.

There was a wide divergence of opinion, however, on the question of working wives. Four out of every five women graduates signified their willingness to work to help make marriage possible. But only two out of every five men were willing to let their wives work. The other three insisted that they would not marry until they were earning enough to support their households alone. At the University of Minnesota, the survey shows, men prefer to be the wage earners in their families; 74 per cent objected to the wife's working, although 80 per cent of the girls were willing to help with family expenses. At Chicago only 53 per cent of the men objected to working wives and 79 per cent of the girls were willing to work. At New York university only 49 per cent of the men objected to the wife's help and 79 per cent of the girls approved of working wives.

Three-fourths of the girl graduates expect to be married within the next five years. But only one-half of the men graduates expect to be married within the next five years. Of the co-eds, 41 per cent prefers marriage to a career; 28 per cent prefers a career, and 31 per cent wants both, and can see no eason why a career and happy marriage are not compatible.

Ideas on Starting Wage in Line with Facts.

The graduates' ideas as to a fair starting salary which they would be worth in the business world at present are not far out of line with the actual initial salaries being offered. The men's ideas of a satisfactory starting salary averaged $1,760; the women thought $1,430 a year a fair figure. A recent survey by the insurance company, covering the placement departments of 68 universities, disclosed the prevailing range of salaries actually being offered graduates by business men to be from $1,080 to $1,560 annually.

The seniors who answered the questionnaire numbered 213 at Minnesota, 150 at Chicago, and 160 at New York university.

3 CHICAGO'S CHIEF RAIL AND AIR TRUNK LINES: BLACK LINES SHOW THE RAILWAY ROUTES, RED LINES THE AIRWAYS THE HEAVY BLACK BANDS MARK THE RIGHTS OF WAY OF THOSE EARLY RAILWAYS (1836-1855) WHICH FORMED THE NUCLEI OF TODAY'S TRUNK SYSTEMS.

How Nature Selected Its Site

By HARRY A. LAIRD

EARLY explorers who visited the Chicago area appear to have agreed on one point—that the physical characteristics of the district left much to be desired as a site for a great transportation center. True, it was located at the head of Great Lakes navigation, but offered no harbor. The sluggish and shallow Chicago river then turned southward near its mouth to enter the lake at a point near the present Art institute, and over a sandbar that was fordable during a substantial part of the year. Canoes could find a haven, but not ships capable of navigating Lake Michigan.

A few miles south was a continental divide, only a few feet high, between the Chicago and Des Plaines rivers. During high water the Des Plaines discharged a part of its volume over the divide into the Chicago river, rendering the whole district a slough. A canal cut through the divide would open a watercourse from Lake Michigan via the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers to the Mississippi, but the project was beyond the ken of early explorers and frontiersmen. After the spring freshet the Des Plaines river resolved itself into a series of disconnected pools.

Radiating in every direction from this dismal spot were the well worn trails of the bison and the Indian, for it was a natural crossroads. To the red men Green Bay and Detroit were important points, and the trace connecting them was interwoven at the head of Lake Michigan with paths to the St, Joseph, Maumee, Wabash, Kankakee, and Mississippi rivers. Later the roads of the white man were to follow the general direction of these trails, but originally they traced their crooked way across country "as a snake utterly unconcerned about his destination."

A story of the development of the world's greatest transportation center must date back to 1794, when Anthony Wayne broke the power of the northwest Indian tribes at the Battle of Fallen Timbers. The price of victory extorted from the Indians was the free use of the waterway from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, as well as the cession of a reservation for a fort at Chicago. That gave the district Fort Dearborn and the nucleus for a settlement, but, although constructed in 1803, it was destined to remain a mere outpost, subject to Indian attack and massacre for nearly thirty years. The only transportation activity of the period was the construction of military roads from Detroit and Fort Wayne.

In 1833 Gurdon S. Hubbard, youthful agent of the American Fur company at Vincennes, crashed a breach through the forests to connect the Wabash country with Chicago. Hubbard's trace became a state road in 1834, and, entering Chicago along the western boundary of the Fort Dearborn (Continued on page eight.)

Mantle Finds Screen "Green Pastures" More Artificial

Sets Better than Those of Stage Play

Picture Sequences Are Good, but Camera's Magic Proves Limited.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—Well, here we are writing about "The Green Pastures" again. Now it is the picture, which had its first showing in our town last week. I do not know just how widely it has been released by the Warners for public showing. Eventually it will get around to every sizable town, just as the play did, and to many a small town in which the play could not be accommodated.

If you were to ask me whether or not the picture is better than the play, I should have to fall back upon that familiar answer that is no answer: "Yes—and no." There are scenes—beautiful scenes—the stage version could neither produce nor reproduce. There is a fullness of story and a solidity of foundation in the picture version the stage version lacked. And yet, curiously, the picture version seemed to me the more artificial of the two.

I think it was natural to expect more of the screen. The camera's possibilities in the realms of fantasy and imagery are so limitless nothing really would seem to be beyond it. Thus, when the early views of the heaven that is to figure in the retelling of the story disclose a pair of doughnut-shaped clouds with angels seated on them fishing for the fish that are to supply the fish fry, the sequence is not only good for laughter, but suggests a promise of other and more fantastic scenes to follow. That promise, I think, is not fulfilled.

Crude Stage Settings Were Satisfying Ones.

On the stage we were content to accept a crudely blockin-in garden as a darky's heaven seen through the eyes of a 10 year old in the deep south. Our imaginations filled in the lapses and expanded the background.

Seeing the picture, we are inclined to sit back expectantly and wait for the film folk to effect a miracle. Our imaginations are prepared to take a night off. What we get in the animated black and white sequences of the screen is satisfying, but not stirring. . . .

In its sentimental values, too, the picture version both gains and loses. Filling out the early scenes, bringing to life the people whose children are called to the funny little Sunday school by a great big bell to listen to the Rev. Deshee tell the story of the creation in words of one syllable, and give descriptions of primitive, recognizable situations, is of vast advantage to the screen play. And here it isn't the Rev. Deshee who is re-created in God's image, but a kindly old uncle who sits with his young nephew during the lesson and who is, in the nephew's mind, much like God.

There is the same sentimental tug to the scenes with Noah [Eddie Anderson] and Moses [Frank Wilson] that there was in the play. Rex Ingram, trebling the parts of Adam, Hezdrel, and de Lawd, gives superlatively good performances in all three rôles. But he is not, nor could he be expected to be, a Richard Harrison. That grand old preacher and dramatic reader of the colored race stepped from the wings of the Mansfield theater back in 1930, after Gabriel had sonorously declaimed: "Gangway! gangway for de Lawd God Jehovah!" to be de Lawd—forever and forever, de Lawd of "The Green Pastures." There never will be another.

Characterizations Have Great Dignity.

There is dignity in the Ingram characterizations. A masterful bit of makeup makes him de Lawd, a noble, upstanding figure, and a youthful eagerness transforms him into the first created Adam and the fighting Hezdrel. There is the fire of faith and the glory of conviction in his enveloping smile, and the sweep of a compassion that takes in the universe. And there is a more theatrically effective though, of course, not a truer note of suffering in his discovery that to be a God of wrath and vengeance is not enough. The God of mercy, reborn through suffering, also easily comes within his range, and as the clouds close in, those overpuffed and sugared crullers that are shutting heaven from our sight—or little Johnny's sight, Johnny being by this time, fast asleep on uncle's lap—it is a misty-eyed, emotionally stirred audience that stands to applaud this rebirth of what Brooks Atkinson eloquently classified as "the divine comedy of the American theater." . . .

The greatest enjoyment that those who have seen the stage version of "The Green Pastures" will get from this pictured version, I think, will be in its reminder of the happy thrills the play gave them: That gorgeous bit when old Noah, his ears startled by the roll of thunder, and his eyes widened by the flash of lightning, recognizes de Lawd and pitifully apologizes: "I should have knowed you, Lawd. I should have seen de glory. I ain' very much, but I'se all I got." That moving end of the pilgrimage with old Moses, come to the promised land but denied entrance because of the incident of the tablets, when de Lawd helps the old man up for a view of a new land, "a million times nicer dan de land of Caneyan." There is an unforgettable thrill in all these scenes.

Misses Old Treadmills and Funny Stage Sets.

The exodus from Egypt is marvelously pictured, but I missed the old treadmills and the funny stage panorama. The Hall Johnson choir, however, makes up for all lapses. The spirituals, to me, always have been a definite part of the charm of "The Green Pastures." As Alexander Woollcott has written: "Nothing can so poignantly evoke the flavor of the receding past as some remembered tune." . . . The spirituals re-create every scene and intensify the charm of the action. They are magnificently sung.

The cast is expertly chosen for types. Oscar Polk, the third or fourth of the Gabriels, is the equal of any of them. I wish Marc Connelly, who did his own directing with William Keighley's help, had let Gabriel fool a bit more with his trumpet—but probably there was no time for that. There are many indications that the footage has been cut to the bone. It had to be, I suppose, otherwise the old story would have run on forever. Even the play always seemed to end abruptly.

"The Green Pastures" has started up on another cycle. Reports will be heard from it and of it for another year or so. It will be banned in places without a scintilla of reason. It will be extoled in places as the most telling of sermons, which, in its simplicity and its humanness, it is.

And then, after another lapse of time, I have an idea that it will be rescreened in technicolor. "The Green Pastures" would be grand with nature's colors added. I think it needs them. I expect to see it at New York's World's fair in 1939 as a technicolor feature, in a theater all its own. And I shall expect to get the same thrill then that I get now whenever the choir raises its voices in "Rise, Shine, Give God the Glory." . . .

N. Y. Municipal Opera Sensation of Season.

New York, as one of the world's great summer resorts, at last has caught up with St. Louis, Mo. Its municipal opera is the sensation of this summer's season. This opera is sung at Jones' Beach, which is forty miles from the city, down on Long Island. The stage is built on a bit of made land in an inlet of Long Island sound, known as Zach's bay. The platform is immense, and the system of lighting is elaborate.

On the bay shore seats for 10,300 have been built. Twice last week, when the bill was "The Student Prince," the amphitheater was filled to capacity, and there were thousands outside who could not get accommodations. Prices for seats range from 25 cents to $1, and there are 2,000 free seats for those who cannot afford more than the money it costs to get them there. Fortune Gallo provides the operas, his San Carlo Opera company being the contributing artists.

Most of the audience rides to the beach in its own or its friends' cars, though there is a bus service for those who must travel by train. Acres and acres of motor cars are taken care of by an elaborate parking system. By the time the family parks the car and walks to and from the opera it has had a pretty fair amount of exercise.

I estimated last week that on those hot nights when the Jones Beach opera was being sung to more than 10,000 patrons, and five portable theaters were entertaining probably 40,000 people in five of the city's parks, and fifteen WPA units were performing in as many auditoriums, halls, and churches in other sections of the city, that in the neighborhood of 75,000 citizens were the patrons of amusements subsidized by the state.

Can you imagine the cry against such an evidence of an encroaching "socialism" that would have been raised to crush such enterprises twenty years ago?

COMEDY STAR OF "MOONLIGHT FOLLIES"

Nina Olivette, who appeared with Bert Lahr in "Hold Your Horses," is an important part of the current revue on the Beach Walk of the Edgewater Beach hotel. One of her stunts is a burlesque on popular ballroom dancing.

Tenor Signs with Met.

Sydney Rayner, the American tenor who sang important rôles with the Chicago City Opera company last fall, is reported to have signed a three year contract with New York's Metropolitan Opera association. This fact need not interfere with his work here, for the seasons do not overlap. Mr. Rayner was born in New Orleans, but his singing has carried him to many parts of Europe. He got his chance with the Metropolitan in the recent spring season.

Joe Lewis Heads Chez Paree Bill

Ozzie Nelson's Famous Orchestra Appearing at the Palmer House.

● The summer show which Chez Paree introduced a week ago Friday, and which is still running nightly at the near north side theater restaurant, features four big acts. Joe Lewis, one of the town's favorite entertainers, heads the bill. Ramon and Renita, the dancers, who recently had a week of stage appearances at the Palace theater; Lee Sims and Ilomay Bailey, whose playing and singing have given them a place on stage, screen, and in radio, and Edgar Bergen, an unusual ventriloquist whose comic goings-on are aided and abetted by his stooge, Charlie, complete the cabaret's headline attractions. The supporting cast includes Edna Janis, tap dancer, and the Readinger twins, called the "dancing delights."

● The Empire room of the Palmer house holds another opulent new show backed up by Ozzie Nelson's famous orchestra, now making its first Chicago appearance. Songstress with Nelson's band is Joy Hodges, replacing Harriet Hilliard [Mrs. Nelson], who has retired from the show business. The new show consists of Rosita and Fontana, ballroom dancers extraordinary; Wences, a ventriloquist from Spain who juggles nonchalantly as he pursues his other avocation; the Lathrop brothers and Virginia Lee, tap dancers, who use no metal taps in their shoes; Bentley Stone, known for his work with the opera ballet, and the Abbott dancers. Milton Douglas, the baritone, has been held over from the Lombardo days.

● Joe Sanders, "the Ole Lefthander," directing the orchestra and acting as master of ceremonies at the Blackhawk, keeps busy at odd times composing new songs. The most recent is "The House Isn't Home Without You," written during the absence of Mrs. Sanders, who is visiting relatives in Kansas City. Another of his late tunes is the swingy, sentimental ballad, "Anything Your Little Heart Desires." Barbara Parks has been featuring the latter number. She is vocalist with the orchestra and star of the Blackhawk's revue.

● The Continental room of the Stevens hotel will make a specialty of famous dance teams. Crawford and Caskey are featured there now. After them come Maurine and Norva, Stuart and Lea, and Mario and Floria.

● Frances Williams, singing star of four editions of George White's "Scandals" and "Life Begins at 8:40," opened a new show at the Yacht club last Wednesday night. Others are Mickey Alpert and Katherine Rand, the Three Marvels, and the Sherr brothers. Nino Rinaldo and Charles Engles pilot the two Yacht club bands.

● The Edgewater Beach hotel introduced last Friday evening the fourth edition of its Moonlight Follies. This is the fanciful name given to the two nightly shows on the north side hotel's beach walk, where Bernie Cummins and his orchestra play for the dancers. The new Moonlight Follies offer Nina Olivette, whose comedy productions enlist the services of Murray and King. Others in the show are the Two Eileens, blonde dancing stylists; the team of Shalita and Carlton, and Park and Clifford, acrobats. Harlette Smith's Lovely Ladies have been held over from the previous revue.

● George Givot's Radio circus, in the College inn of the Hotel Sherman, is featuring the Three Heat Waves, the Two Zephyrs, Al Trace's band, and the Ice Carnival. A star of the carnival is Bess Ehrhardt.

Season Success

KATHERINE CORNELL finished her busy season July 18 in San Francisco. Just how busy it was is indicated by the following facts: She played Juliet in the Shakespeare tragedy for twelve and one half weeks in New York and on tour, and the title rôle of Shaw's "St. Joan" 2½ weeks in New York and on the road. She traveled over 12,000 miles, visiting 26 different cities, and crossed the boundaries of 16 states. Gross receipts for the season exceeded $750,000, and 300,000 people came to see her. Des Moines walked away with the season record—$7,932.55 for a single performance of "Romeo and Juliet." Miss Cornell is to have a long vacation on Majorca, after which she will return to New York to begin rehersals of Maxwell Anderson's "Wingless Victory." This play is slated for late fall production.

Talent to Be Rewarded.

The National Federation of Music clubs, with the coöperation of eminent musicians and educators, will seek to find and reward deserving talent in its 1937 Young Artists contests and Student Musicians contests. Full information on times, places, and requirements for both competitions may be obtained by addressing Mrs. Ruth Haller Ottaway, executive chairman of contests, Music Clubs Magazine office, 320 Wait avenue, Ithaca, N. Y.

About Orchestras

TWO notes on dance orchestras once famous in Chicago:

Clyde McCoy and his Sugar Blues orchestra, who held the bandstand of the Drake for so long, have completed a movie short in Brooklyn, and moved to the Claridge hotel, Memphis, Tenn., where they will remain until the end of the month. After a week in the Iroquois gardens, Louisville, starting Aug. 1, the musicians go into Ohio for some engagements.

Carl "Deacon" Moore and his orchestra opened at the New Blossom Heath club in Tonowanda, N. Y., near Buffalo, on July 16. They go to Boston's Normandie ballroom for an indefinite engagement in the fall.

"Dead End" for Chicago.

Norman Bel Geddes has started to engage players for the Chicago company of "Dead End," which opens at the Studebaker theater on Sept. 13.

Mad Marx Brothers on Palace Stage

Gifted Comedians Bring "A Day at the Races" to Chicago Audiences.

The Marx brothers are in town, holding the stage of the Palace theater in a mad musical comedy called "A Day at the Races," written for the Marxes and eventually destined for the films. These gifted comedians, who have not appeared in Chicago in the flesh for many years, have brought with them a large company, which includes Margaret Dumont, Harry Stockwell, Lorraine Bridges, and Esther Muir. There is a line of pretty dancing girls, of course, and special scenery and costumes. The Marx brothers' engagement is limited to one week.

Verne Buck, popular State-Lake theater director, is helping this week to celebrate the third anniversary of that show house under its present management—Aaron Jones and his two sons. Buck has made a new loop band record during these three years by staying in this one spot for 156 weeks, with only six weeks out for vacation. The anniversary bill features Joe May and company; Britt Wood, harmonica wizard; the Keller Sisters and Lynch; Tyler, Thorne, and Post [in a "tap minuet"]; Randolph Avery & Co., and Elaine May.

The current stage bill at the Chicago theater includes Hal Mencken, the tap dancer, and Carl Schictl and His Wonderettes. The Evans ballet returns to the downtown showhouse after vacation.

An ambitious stage revue with ten acts and twenty-four girls is featured at the Oriental theater this week. Among its items is "The Girl with Three Faces," a dance novelty imported from Paris. The show is presented under the title, "Pousse Café Revue."

Music Critic Traces Brilliant Career of Werner Janssen

Director Wins Foreign Fame, Then American

Makes Bow to Chicago District July 30 as Conductor at Ravinia.

By Edward Barry.

WERNER JANSSEN had to gather a trunkful of laurel wreaths abroad before his own country would pay much attention to him. When a series of European successes reached a climax in Helsingfors, where he conducted an all-Sibelius program in the presence of the composer himself, New York began to question its own wisdom in letting this talented boy get away. He obtained a two weeks' engagement with the Philharmonic orchestra in 1934 and became the first native born New Yorker ever to direct Father Knickerbocker's prize band.

This coming Thursday young Janssen [he is still in his middle 30s] comes to Ravinia Park to make his bow to the Chicago district. That day will mark the beginning of the fifth and final week of the Ravinia festival, which consists, this first year, of twenty programs by the Chicago Symphony orchestra under guest conductors.

Reviewer Calls Him a Man of Tomorrow.

Here are a few additional details of the life of Werner Janssen, whom a New York reviewer called "a man of tomorrow."

His first twenty-one years [1900 to 1921] were passed in an outwardly uneventful fashion, growing up, going to high school, and then college. At Dartmouth he worked as kitchen boy, played in the local movie house, and occupied himself with other odd jobs, finding time on the side to gradually become familiar with the standard music of the world. His urge to compose found outlets in the writing of dance tunes and a pair of college musicals.

Once outside the serene confines of school Janssen came hard up against the world of reality in the shape of such unappetizing jobs as that of piano player in a sailors' dance hall in Boston and song demonstrator for prospective ten cent store buyers. He got some work, however, from the old and dignified firm of Oliver Ditson.

The courageous fellow decided to try his luck in his own city, and moved back to New York to do ghost writing, composing and, in general, take a hand in the activities of Tin Pan alley.

Gained Fame Through His Work Over Radio.

He broke into radio and, before reaching thirty, had received enough of a build-up from NBC to rank as a celebrity of a minor sort. One of his activities for this network consisted in interpreting in music the sights, sounds, and events of the passing show of big city life.

Janssen was awarded the Prix de Rome in 1930, chiefly on the basis of his descriptive work, "New Year's Eve in New York." Then began four years of study and practice in Europe where his talents and influence won him invitations to direct some of the orchestras of that continent.

Our hero had long been intensely interested in the music of Sibelius, and had so immersed himself in the subtleties and austere glories of the symphonies that be became, while still in his young manhood, a sort of authority on the Sibelius style. Imagine the excitement, then, of being offered an opportunity to conduct in Helsingfors a program made up exclusively of the works of the great Finn, with the composer himself in attendance. This chance came after successful appearances in Rome, Berlin, Stockholm, Copenhagen, and Riga.

Composer Impressed by Conductor's Ability.

Sibelius himself was moved by the competent way in which the young American had grasped the idiom of a style which is still considered by some conductors to be harsh and ungrateful. The Finnish press was enthusiastic. One paper went so far as to declare that up to that time no one had conducted Sibelius like this. "We have tasted a bit of eternity," this particular scribe continued.

Janssen returned to America like a musical Lindbergh, to be received in triumph and offered the keys of his own city. He was given two engagements, of two and three weeks respectively, by the New York Philharmonic orchestra; and carried his baton as guest to such cities as Cleveland, Rochester, and St. Louis. There have been additional European appearances also, but the now famous conductor has never yet visited Chicago in his present capacity.

Young Mr. Janssen gets right down to business Thursday. With a brief preliminary tribute to Father Handel, he goes immediately into the Sibelius First Symphony. The Janssen programs at Ravinia are scheduled for Thursday and Friday night and Sunday afternoon. Hans Lange returns for a single engagement Saturday night.

Sanders to Direct Grant Park Program Wednesday.

Among the new things promised by the Chicago Park district and the Chicago Federation of Musicians for the free lake front concerts in Grant park this week is a program Wednesday night by the Chicago Symphony orchestra under the baton of Robert Sanders. This is the Chicago composer, organist, and choir director who has been associated with Mr. DeLamarter for the last few years in the Civic orchestra's conducting school. There is a wealth of light material on the program, balanced by the Sibelius Second Symphony.

The De Paul university chorus, under Dean Arthur C. Becker, sings tonight with Richard Czerwonky's Chicago Philharmonic orchestra. Berenice Taylor bows to Grant park audiences tomorrow, offering an excerpt from "Lohengrin" and Arditi's "Il Bacio." Another soprano, Basha Malinoff, is slated for Friday, to divide the honors of the evening with Henry Thompson, tenor, and Thaviu's band.

Gladys Welge takes the baton of the absent Ebba Sundstrom Saturday to conduct the Woman's Symphony orchestra through a program which will feature solos by the bass-baritone, Ray Steiner.

In addition to all this, the week promises appearances by organizations, conductors, and soloists already familiar to lake front audiences. Attendance is holding up excellently.

Late Pianist Had a Brilliant Career Here and Abroad

GRACE HENSHAW-FREDERIKSEN, the Chicago pianist who died May 16, had an interesting career which began in London when she won the Liszt scholarship. This honor entitled her to three years' study in Germany, where she had Carl Klindworth as a teacher. Later she appeared as soloist with the Crystal Palace Symphony orchestra, London, and inaugurated a series of joint recitals there with her husband, Frederik Frederiksen, the violinist. Mr. and Mrs. Frederiksen moved to Chicago when the former was engaged to teach here as assistant to Emile Sauret.

Young Pianist to Give Winter Recital Here

N.C.J.W. Announces First Full Length Chicago Concert by Serkin.

The Chicago division of the National Council of Jewish Women has made an announcement the importance of which is somewhat reduced by the fact that the event it concerns is still in the distant future. Rudolph Serkin, the young Bohemian pianist who appeared as soloist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra last season, will play his first full length Chicago recital, under N. C. J. W. auspices, on Dec. 14 of this year. Serkin received quite a fanfare in the east and, although his playing of the "Emperor" concerto here did not seem anything extraordinary, it will be extremely interesting to hear the pianist in a program which will give him an opportunity to demonstrate his powers in several different types of music.

Ilgair park, on the far northwest side [7200 north, 6200 west], is presenting free to the public a series of summer open air Sunday evening recitals by some of the promising young artists of the city. Last Sunday, George Haas, musical director of the project, presented Israel Baker, violinist, and Sylvia Libkin, dancer. He announces for tonight a recital by Virginia Houston, pianist; Mebel Rose, contralto, and Carl Van Buskirk, baritone.

Florence Trumbull, the pianist who was for many years associated with Theodor Leschetisky, and who now is a resident of this city, will play the following selections next Wednesday at 11 a. m. as a part of the summer activities program of the Chicago Woman's club.

Old Opera Still Popular.

Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," nearly 100 years old, still possesses a vitality and drawing power that few younger works can equal. In St. Louis, recently, 66,000 people attended seven presentations of the hoary opus. The Municipal opera of that city again is giving summer open air performances this year.

GOOD Morning!

Here's the picture starring that little Bobby Breen you've heard on the Eddie Cantor hour. Beautiful voice, you know. Supposed to be about to become Freddie Bartholomew's serious rival.

He's a dear little chap—no doubt about that, and does have a remarkable voice. Also, he resembles Freddie. But the child has been too much directed and, because he screws up his face into expressions of sappy sweetness when he sings, and endeavors to smile like an angel, his songs lose much of their effectiveness. However, he CAN sing—rendering aria, lullaby, topical number, effortlessly.

Give the boy a director who knows his kids and Bobby'll be a winner.

Opening Scenes of Picture in Naples.

To me, the real star of the production is Henry Armetta.

The story opens in Naples. Here you see a struggling baritone, his discontented American wife, and their baby boy. The wife takes the child and runs away to America. Leon Alba loses sight of them.

Alice dies and, under the name of Billy Gordon, the child finds his home in an orphanage. He runs away and attaches himself to Joe Pasquale, once a famous tenor, now—his voice gone—doing a comedy stunt with a traveling tent show.

Joe tries, without avail, to shake the little fellow, but there's no getting rid of him. So, he sets himself to train what he recognizes as a remarkable voice.

Villain Plans to Exploit Youngster.

Diablo, a trapeze performer, also realizes Billy has a great gift, and makes subterranean plans to adopt the boy and exploit him.

In the meantime Alba, now famous, is moving heaven and earth to find his wife and son. Eventually, of course, all is well.

Mr. Armetta, known for his human and fiery interpretation of Italian types, gives a masterly performance. Usually he only inspires laughter, but here he has a Pagliacci appeal.

George Houston is somewhat amateurish in his first scenes, but later—especially when he sings—makes you warm up to him. He has a sort of Dennis King virility of rendition, and is a handsome fellow.

Vivienne Osborn is gracious and winsome as one Rosa Donnelli, a singer who is a lovely cog in the wheels of action. Grant Withers is a convincing mean cuss—as a mean cuss.

The picture is clean, pleasingly staged and photographed, and certainly has its moments.

See you tomorrow.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

Letters published in this department should be written on one side of the paper. If you wish a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

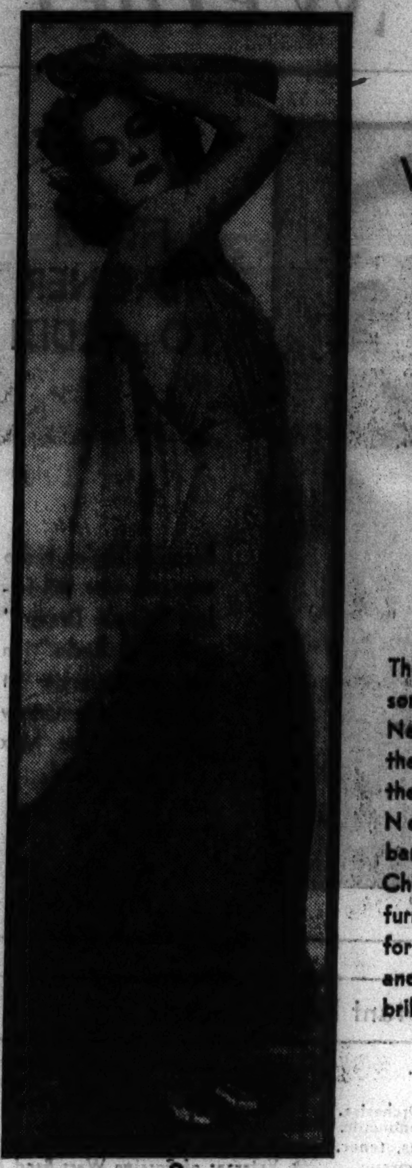
Phil Regan Admirer Asks for a Bit of Biography.

Dear Miss Tinee: I have been a daily reader of your column for years, but this is the first time I ever have written you. However, after seeing Phil Regan in "Laughing Irish Eyes" the other night, I am wondering why he has not been in more and bigger pictures all this time. He has personality, looks, a grand voice, and acting ability, and he certainly made this movie most enjoyable.

Kindly tell me something about Mr. Regan, also where I can write him. Hoping to see this letter in print soon, I am,

Cordially, "SUE."

Editor's note: You like Mr. Regan, don't you? Well, here's about him: Phil Regan, singer and actor, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., May 28, 1908. He is 5 feet 10 inches tall, has black hair and hazel eyes. While a boy he was a boatman in the Charleston, S. C., navy yard. He was a clerk for an oil company, clerked in different parts of the country, then became a court clerk in New York City, finally a detective. After his voice was trained he sang for the Columbia Broadcasting system. Given a contract by Warner Brothers, he has appeared in "The Key," "Housewife," "Dames," "Sweet Adeline," "Go Into Your Dance," "In Caliente," "We're in the Money," "Stars Over Broadway," and "Laughing Irish Eyes."



MEET UP WITH JOY

This is Joy Hedges, songstress with Ozzie Nelson's orchestra in the Empire room of the Palmer house. Nelson's famous band, making its first Chicago appearance, furnishes the music for the loop dinner and supper club's brilliant new floor show.

Hollywood Happenings

Geraldine Leslie, playing a stewardess on an ocean liner in "Dodsworth" at United Artists, ought to be a Hollywood notable, even if her name isn't known outside the casting offices. Mrs. Leslie found herself alone in the cinema center with three small children in 1922. "When my husband died," she says, "I began work as an extra. At times I even got some second leads and heavy parts, but generally found myself back in the extra ranks again. I didn't mind. It's been a profession to me, and it has fed my children and kept a roof over their heads. It also has given me enough work to take care of my home and be a mother to them." She came here from Detroit.

Some interesting sidelights on what jokes are not funny to American audiences were confided by Al Boasberg, the gag man, who now is on tour with the three Marx brothers in their preliminary showing of "A Day at the Races" [preliminary to making it as a movie].

Says Mr. Boasberg, "American audiences won't laugh at gags about Lindbergh, about Boy Scouts, or about fraternal orders. On the other hand, gags about bad race tips, income taxes, in-laws, and time payments are always good."

Mr. Boasberg said the Lindbergh baby tragedy has nothing to do with the audiences' dislike for Lindberg jokes, that it grows out of the widespread conviction of the average American citizen that Col. Lindbergh is an exceptionally fine fellow with heroic qualities. Boasberg cited as one of his greatest flops the joke: "What do you think of Lindbergh?" and the answer, "I don't know, I never tasted it."

There's no way to get on the Hollywood map so quickly as to satirize Hollywood. It's the easiest, cheapest, and quickest way to screen fame, possibly because the town is still young, self-conscious, and suffering from growing pains. The latest to cash in on this particular way of 'getting over' is Jerome Cowan, who has been signed by Samuel Goldwyn to play the second lead in Merle Oberon's new play, "Love and War."

Cowan played the lead in "Boy Meets Girl," the Broadway play satirizing Hollywood and the film industry.

The satire in "Once in a Lifetime" brought film fame to Moss Hart and George Kaufman some years back, and Norman Krasna, at that time an underpaid press agent at Warner Brothers, crashed the big money in films after his stage play, "Louder, Please," gave Broadway the lowdown on film antics.

Cary Grant was sighted leaning intently over a tray of midget gold gadgets which are to be hung on Mary Brian's bracelet. Mary is to go to England shortly for some more pitcure work. She did three there last year and likes the land of Cary's birth very well, indeed.

Marlene Dietrich lately has been carrying out the movie queen tradition in a big way, being quite elegant and elaborate, even more so than Swanson in her queenliest days. Her recent departure for Europe saw nineteen trunks housed on the train in an adjoining suite, and her reservations on the Normandie included two suites, with private promenade decks and sun decks on each. Constance Bennett has been doing a bit of queening herself since returning from Europe. On the set of "Ladies Must Live" at the Paramount she has been keeping a chromium finished, imported limousine, with liveried chauffeur permanently stationed in front of the sound stage in order that she might be driven the eighty feet from the stage to her personal dressing room.

Martha Raye, Paramount's pep song and dance gal, is suffering from foot trouble caused by too much dancing. Incidentally, Martha brought down the house at the preview of Crosby's new picture, "Rhythm on the Range." Bob Burns, "Bazooka" Burns of radio fame, also scored a tremendous personal hit with his numbers.

Veloz and Yolanda, ballroom dance team, arrived in Hollywood with the routine for their "Champagne Waltz" number, in Gladys Swarthout's film of the same name, all worked out from recordings of the music sent them while they were on their eastern tour. Two hundred and fifty dancers will be used with them in the big musical number.

Mady Christians, famous Viennese film star who came to Hollywood for work at M-G-M two years ago, but who was cast in film stories not of her type, was recalled to studio work here when she was on the eve of departing for Europe to take up an operatic career. Goldwyn hired her for a rôle in "Come and Get It," the Edward Arnold picture.

Maureen O'Sullivan suspects that the fan who mailed her some Arab pastry did not wish her well, for it was so hard she broke off a tooth trying to be appreciative by eating it.

The Boiling Baltic - Latvia's Role in European Drama

A Nation of Farmers Ruled Over by an Extraordinary Chief

By JOHN S. STEELE

Riga, Latvia.

UP HERE in the Baltic, and particularly in Latvia, where the people are all farmers and there is little industry, the highest praise that can be given to a man is to say that he is a good farmer. It is like saying of an American that he is a good business man. Today Latvia is governed by a group of good farmers with Karlis Ulmanis, a farmer before he was a politician, at its head. The ideals of the good farmer are the ideals of Ulmanis and his government—to live within one's income, to cultivate the soil, and to seek the best markets. A farm so run cannot but prosper, and a nation so run, as is proved by the experience of Latvia, gains prosperity in the same way.

This prosperity has been accomplished without any sensational new deal. There is a poor relief system which provides for the old and sick, but there is no dole for the able-bodied idle. In Latvia a man must work before he eats, and while in the height of the depression the government provided work by pushing on with necessary improvements, such as sadly needed road building, renovating old public buildings and erecting a few new ones, men were employed on these projects in exactly the same way as in private employment. They were paid the usual scale, and they had to give an honest day's work for their wage. If they didn't work they were sacked. They were encouraged to go back to the farm from the cities by the regulation that a man who had gone back to the farm would have first call on a town job when times improved.

The result is that Latvia out of her population of about two million has only 2,000 unemployed, and most of these are unemployable or at least inferior. This is proved by the fact that Latvia imports every summer about 40,000 agricultural laborers from neighboring Poland and Lithuania, who work during the planting and harvest and are then returned to their own countries.

But before going into the economic setup of Latvia it is necessary to describe the political situation which has led to the present happy position of stability and comparative prosperity.

Like most of the new countries in Europe which emerged from the great war, Latvia suffered from an overdose of parliamentary government. In a parliament of about 100 members there were twenty-six parties. No government could secure a stable majority, for the multiplicity of groups led to log rolling and pork barrel politics. A party of three might upset a government that refused a local bridge or army barracks. Parties and groups shifted and changed almost daily, and no government was secure. Parliament voted for great public works and other expenditures but neglected to provide the money and left that to the government.

The crisis came in 1934 when that good farmer, Karlis Ulmanis, decided that the national farm was being mismanaged and that a new manager was necessary, and by one of the neatest coups in history seized power with the aid of another good farmer and soldier, General Balodis, minister of war, when all the politicians were at a party at the French legation. As they came out they were quietly arrested and in the morning Latvia woke up to find that parliament had been abolished and that a dictator was in power.

Ulmanis, however, is no ordinary dictator. Perhaps his commonsense views of government and his moderation were learned in America, where for five years he was a lecturer on agriculture at Nebraska university, Lincoln, Neb. At any rate he did not "bump off" his opponents, as some other European dictators have done. Instead he pensioned them off, and their pensions continue during good behavior. They have been well behaved.

Ulmanis has had two years to consolidate his power. He began by a régime of strict economy—good farming. Burocracies were cut down. Expenditure was cut until it fell below income. Taxes were collected, and while they do not seem high, they provide enough for the state. Income tax starts at about 2 per cent on small incomes and rises to about 25 on the half dozen largest. Most of the revenue is obtained by indirect taxation—customs and excise—which are easier to collect and cause less friction and which can be used to encourage home industry as well as to raise revenue.

Liquor is heavily taxed. There is an excise tax on sugar, which is all home produced. Tobacco is also fairly heavily taxed. In return for that the farmer is given help in the export market. Budgets have been balanced without borrowing.

While this internal recovery was going on, a foreign policy of good-neighborliness was being cultivated. Latvia took the lead in organizing the Baltic alliance, which so far consists of Latvia and Estonia, with the friendly coöperation of Poland, and includes Lithuania in all but name. That is to say that while there are the closest relations with Lithuania, she will not be admitted to the alliance until she settles her quarrel with Poland over Vilna. When that is accomplished, which it is hoped will be after the coming Lithuanian elections, a real Baltic alliance including the three Baltic states and Poland will form a strong barrier against aggression by Russia on the one side or Germany on the other.

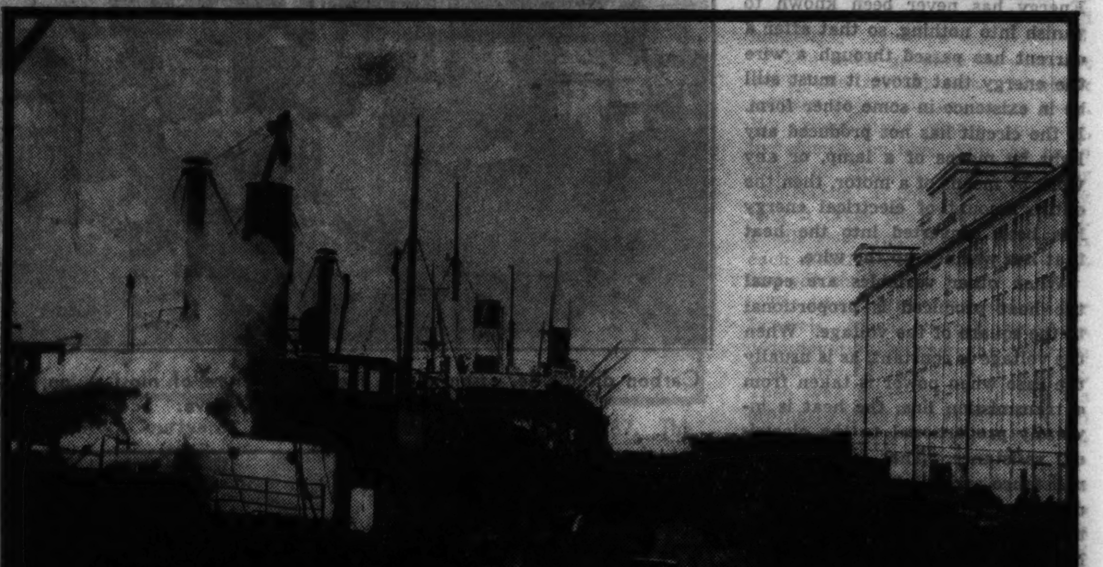
Dictator Ulmanis



Loading butter and eggs for shipment from a wharf at Riga. Farm produce is the main source of wealth in Latvia.

Latvia is a nation of farmers. Here are some of them with their produce in the Riga market.

When that time comes Ulmanis will have consolidated his power by the reorganization of the form of government and the framing of the new constitution which is now under way. When he pulled off his coup d'état and abolished the parliament he took to himself the two offices of president and prime minister. He did not actually combine them in one office, as has been done by some other dictators, but he acts sometimes as one and sometimes as the other. Under the new constitution, however, it is believed he will create a new office of chief of state which will combine both functions. No one knows yet, however, what his plans are in detail.

Parliament will not be restored. Already he has gone far in organizing the new system, which is based on the Italian corporative state, altered to suit Latvian conditions. Government will be by six corporations representing trade and industry, artisanship, agriculture, labor, and culture. Already the trade and industry and agriculture corporations have been set up, with about ninety representative men in each. The first corporation members are nominated by the minister-president, but it is expected that later they will be elected. These corporations will legislate for their constituents, or rather advise the government, and they will keep in touch with each other through standing executive committees. The full corporations will each meet twice a year. No provision has yet been made for the choice of the president. He may be popularly elected or chosen by the corporations.

That the system suits Latvia is shown by its peaceful acceptance. There is no opposition party. What there was in the way of opposition disappeared when the old parliamentarians were first jailed and then pensioned. Occasionally a stray communist is caught and locked up, but there is no communist party.

Latvia is too close to Russia to be inclined to flirt with communism. She has seen its effects at first hand. At the same time good diplomatic relations are maintained with Russia, and a few weeks ago the chief of the Latvian general staf, with the chiefs of the Estonian and Lithuanian stafs, were invited to Moscow to see the might of the Russian army. They went and saw and came home, knowing that the dual object of the visit was to impress them with Russia's strength and to give a hint to Germany to keep her hands off the Baltic.

The Letts have ceased to be interested in politics as such. Like good farmers, they are now attending to their job of cultivating the soil. They have learned that the pork barrel must be constantly replenished and that a bridge or an unnecessary road must be paid for. Much of the success of the new régime in Latvia is, of course, due to the hard common sense of the farmer population, which knows that you cannot reap without sowing and that only hard work will bring results in clean land and good crops, but much more is due to the example of that good farmer Ulmanis, who has applied the principles of the farm to the business of running the nation.

As a nation of farmers Latvia is dependent on markets for her butter, bacon, flax, and other products of the soil, and she has found them largely in Britain. What northern Europe would do if the British suddenly lost their appetite for bacon and butter is too terrible for the farmer in these countries to contemplate. The Latvians just don't contemplate it, but go on producing the food that Britain and other countries in less degree want and buying most of their manufactured goods from their own best customer. At one time the balance of trade was against them, but this year and last the balance has been in favor of Latvia and looks like continuing so.

This has been achieved by a judicious use of the protective tarif to help the few home industries, and so successful has that been that a substantial export trade has been growing up in paper, manufactured timber products, preserved fish products, and chocolate. The last-named industry is based on Latvian-grown sugar, which is now produced in greater quantities than required for home consumption.

Every effort is made by the government to help the farmer without at the same time sapping his independence. There is no system of direct subsidies, nor is there any plan by which the farmers are compelled to destroy farm products to keep up prices. Instead the foreign trade in the most important products has been taken over by government monopolies. This is true in the cases of butter, bacon, and flax. In the case of timber this is not necessary, as nearly all the forests are owned by the state. These government monopolies buy the product from the farmer at a fair price and then resell in the world market. Occasionally the government loses on its trading, but just as often it gains by an improvement in the international market, so that on balance there is no loss and the farmer is assured of stable and fair prices for all he can produce. This plan also has the advantage of standardizing quality. If a farmer's product falls below the standard the government does not buy. The result is that Latvian food products have an enviable reputation abroad for quality and packing.

Just how important the British market is to the Latvian farmer is shown by a table recently compiled setting out that Britain takes 99 per cent of all the bacon exported, 43 per cent of all the butter, 40 per cent of all the flax, and from 40 to 88 per cent of the various kinds of timber and wool products. In return Latvia takes 100 per cent of her herrings from Britain—the Latvians are great herring eaters—86 per cent of her coal, 65 per cent of her textiles, and about 80 per cent of her iron products.

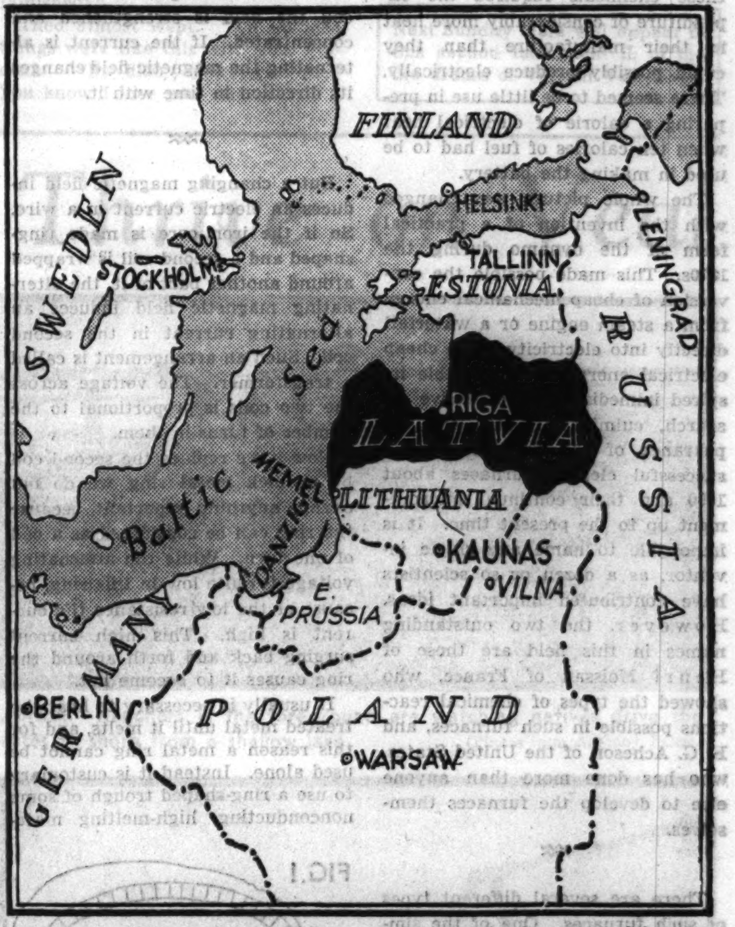
The slump in Britain a couple of years ago hit Latvia hard, but times are improving now. In 1921 Latvia exported 15 tons of butter. That rose rapidly until in 1931 it hit an all-time high of nearly 19,000 tons. Then came the slump and the export fell in 1935 to 16 tons. This was not due to the British ceasing to eat butter, but to their buying inferior qualities elsewhere. The Latvians refused, however, to reduce quality, and now the trade is climbing again, and last year it was up to 160 tons, and this year will probably double that figure.

Flax also is an important Latvian crop, and this industry is benefiting by the immense demand for airplane linen for British rearmament.

A minor but important feature in Latvian recovery has been the judicious program of building and public improvement fostered by the government, and here, too, was displayed the farmer's determination that doles should not be used to demoralize the people and teach habits of idleness. Where new roads were needed, and only there, they were built. New public buildings, if needed, were erected, but the onus of erecting them and of carrying out other improvements was placed on the towns and local authorities. The central government supplied the money, but only for approved schemes and on condition that half of it should be paid back by the local authorities in ten years. That took a good deal of fat out of the pork barrel and discouraged local politicians who wanted to be good to the boys at the public expense.

≈

The effect of this policy is seen throughout the country in sprucing up and new building. Much of the work, of course, has been done in the capital, Riga, and many necessary improvements, such as widening old streets and getting rid of old and insanitary buildings, have been carried out. One of the most striking improvements in the capital has been the enlargement of a square in the center of the town and the erection of a magnificent monument to liberty by the Latvian sculptor, Prof. Karlis Zale. The statue, which consists of a figure of Liberty on a huge granite shaft, surrounded at the base with groups symbolic of Latvian industry, history, and culture, dominates the whole city.



Map of a portion of central Europe, showing the location of Latvia and its size as compared with neighboring countries.

Of course, the whole income of Latvia would be a joke to some of our American New Dealers who think in billions and regard millions as mere cigaret money. The total annual budget is only 160,000,000 lats—the lat at present is worth about three to the dollar—but this money is raised from a nation of hard-headed farmers whose standard of living is about the highest in Europe.

Their money is not eaten up in taxes, the average taxation being about 80 lats, or less than $28, a year. Instead it goes to feeding and clothing the people, and so marked is this in its results that the Polish government is getting uneasy about the thousands of its laborers who go over to work in Latvia every year and come back and tell their friends that a Latvian laborer lives like a Polish lord, and wonder why they can't live as well in Poland.

The Latvian farmers also declare that they have to feed up the Polish laborers for weeks before they are able to do a full day's work—by Latvian standards. Of course, Poland has more need of taxes than little Latvia, which is fairly secure militarily and does not have to support a large army—the Latvian army is only 25,000 strong and the term of service for conscripts only twelve months—while Poland, menaced on one side by Germany and the other by Russia, must pay a heavy insurance premium. The whole cost of Latvia's defense force, including the navy of two submarines and three gunboats, is only 25,000,000 lats, or a little over $8,000,000, a year.

Of course, there is no AAA or NRA, and the alphabet of government is not so overworked in Riga as it is in Washington, but the country is solvent, with no one living on the government and no one asking, "Brother, can you spare a dime?"

Everyone Works!

- Estonia has risen so far above the depression of 1932 that there is a job today within its borders for everyone of employable age and condition.
- In fact, there actually is a labor shortage in Estonia.
- The scale of wages and living is high and the purchasing power of the people is great.
- From the political standpoint Estonia, about which John S. Steele has written for next Sunday's issue of the Graphic Section, is delicately situated among more powerful nations, but to date has been able through clever diplomacy to keep on friendly terms with each.
- If the Boiling Baltic boils over the world will find that the Estonians are tough fighters—this on the word of Mr. Steele, who visited the little country not long ago.

Types Varied for Electric Furnaces

By DR. THOMAS M. BECK

Carbon disulphide, essential for the manufacture of most rayon, is usually made by electrically heating coke and sulphur. Above: Scene in a rayon factory.

ABOUT a century ago it was found that a definite amount of energy was required to make an electric current flow through any kind of matter. Energy has never been known to vanish into nothing, so that after a current has passed through a wire the energy that drove it must still be in existence in some other form. If the circuit has not produced any light by means of a lamp, or any work by means of a motor, then the entire amount of electrical energy has been converted into the heat that has warmed up the wire.

When other variables are equal the heat produced is proportional to the square of the voltage. When the voltage is constant, as is usually the case when power is taken from a transmission line, the heat is inversely proportional to the electrical resistance. That is, halve the resistance and the heat produced is doubled, or triple the resistance and the heat is reduced to a third. We have seen this fact demonstrated every time there is a short circuit in our domestic lighting systems. The short circuit creates a new circuit of much lower resistance. The resulting increase in heat produced is sufficient to melt the fuse and break the circuit.

Almost as soon as it was known that an electric current could produce heat, men began to consider the possibility of electrical furnaces. At first the idea was discarded as impractical for a number of reasons. For one thing, the electrically produced heat came indirectly from the chemical energy of the materials used in making the battery, and these chemicals required the expenditure of considerably more heat in their manufacture than they could possibly produce electrically. There seemed to be little use in preparing a calorie of electrical heat when ten calories of fuel had to be used in making the battery.

The whole picture was changed with the invention of a practical form of the dynamo during the 1870s. This made possible the conversion of cheap mechanical energy from a steam engine or a waterfall directly into electricity. The cheap electrical energy thus available inspired immediate and extensive research, culminating with the appearance of the first industrially successful electric furnaces about 1890 and their continual improvement up to the present time. It is impossible to name any single inventor, as a dozen or so scientists have contributed important ideas. However, the two outstanding names in this field are those of Henri Moissan of France, who showed the types of chemical reactions possible in such furnaces, and E. G. Acheson of the United States, who has done more than anyone else to develop the furnaces themselves.

There are several different types of such furnaces. One of the simplest and least efficient is based on the same principle as the electric toaster. A current is passed through a wire, which is thereby heated to incandescence, and the heat is radiated or conducted to the object to be heated. The trouble with such an arrangement is that the heat is thrown out impartially in all directions and only a minor part actually reaches the object to be heated. Such heaters are used for the same reason that the toaster is, not to save heat, but solely for convenience of operation. (Figure 1.)

The type of furnace used by Moissan for most of his experiments avoids these losses by using as a resistance the actual material to be heated. (Figure 2.) Instead of generating the heat in the heating element and transferring it with more or less loss to the material, the heat is produced directly in the latter.

When two carbon rods are connected to opposite poles of a source of electric potential and are then touched together, a current flows through them. When their contact is broken by a short gap, a small spark leaps across at the moment of separation. This vaporizes a small trace of carbon which permits more electricity to flow, thereby vaporizing more carbon and further increasing the current until a state of equilibrium is reached. At this time a considerable current is travelling across the gap on a bridge of carbon vapor heated to a brilliant incandescence. This is known as the electric arc.

Since there are few substances with higher melting or boiling temperatures than carbon, the temperature of an arc must be extremely high. This fact has led to its application in the electric furnace. The light given off is absorbed by the walls of the furnace or by the material being heated and is likewise converted into heat.

The large carbon rods used may be placed directly above the furnace charge, or the arc may be formed between a rod and the charge itself. (Figure 2.) In the latter case part of the heat comes from the passage of current through the charge, so that the furnace is actually a combination of the arc and resistance types.

Figure 3 represents a third type, the inductance furnace. The way in which it works is not completely obvious and requires the consideration of certain simple facts of electrical induction. When a current passes through a coil of wire it sets up a magnetic field within the coil. If an iron core is placed within the coil the field is strengthened and concentrated. If the current is alternating the magnetic field changes its direction in time with it.

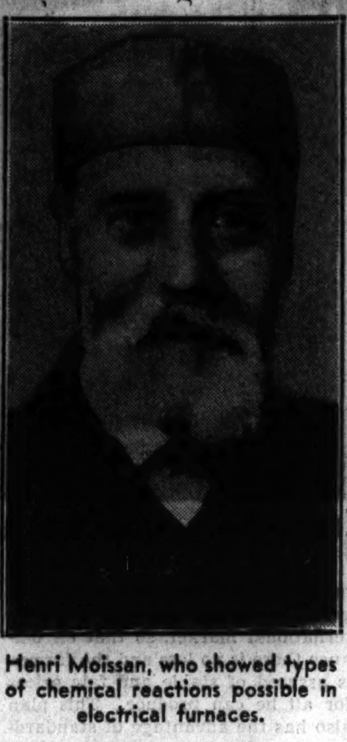
But a changing magnetic field induces an electric current in a wire. So if the iron core is made ring-shaped and a second coil is wrapped around another part of it, the alternating magnetic field induces an alternating current in the second coil. Such an arrangement is called a transformer. The voltage across the two coils is proportional to the number of turns in them.

Now if we replace the second coil by a thick metal ring we do not change anything important, because the ring can be considered as a coil of one turn. While the alternating voltage is quite low in this ring, because of the low resistance the current is high. This high current surging back and forth around the ring causes it to become hot.

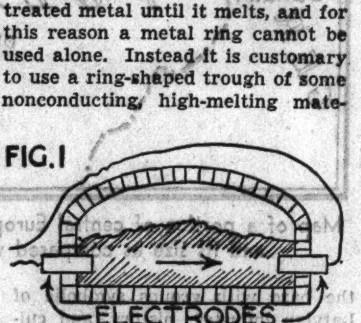
It usually is necessary to heat the treated metal until it melts, and for this reason a metal ring cannot be used alone. Instead it is customary to use a ring-shaped trough of some nonconducting, high-melting material and to place the metal to be treated within this. It has been found desirable to place the trough around that part of the core covered by the coil, although this does not change essentially the operating principles.



Henri Moissan, who showed types of chemical reactions possible in electrical furnaces.

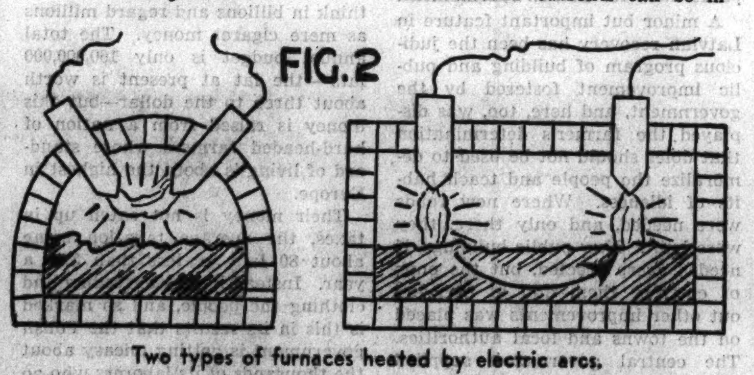
An important modification of the inductance furnace is pictured in Figure 4. In this one the metal to be heated is placed in a crucible and used as the core of a coil. If the high-tension voltage applied to the coil alternates with high enough frequency, momentary inequalities occur in the rapidly changing magnetic field, and these induce innumerable aimless little currents throughout the metal.

FIG.1



Materials may be heated by passing an electric current through them.

FIG.2



Two types of furnaces heated by electric arcs.

FIG. 3.

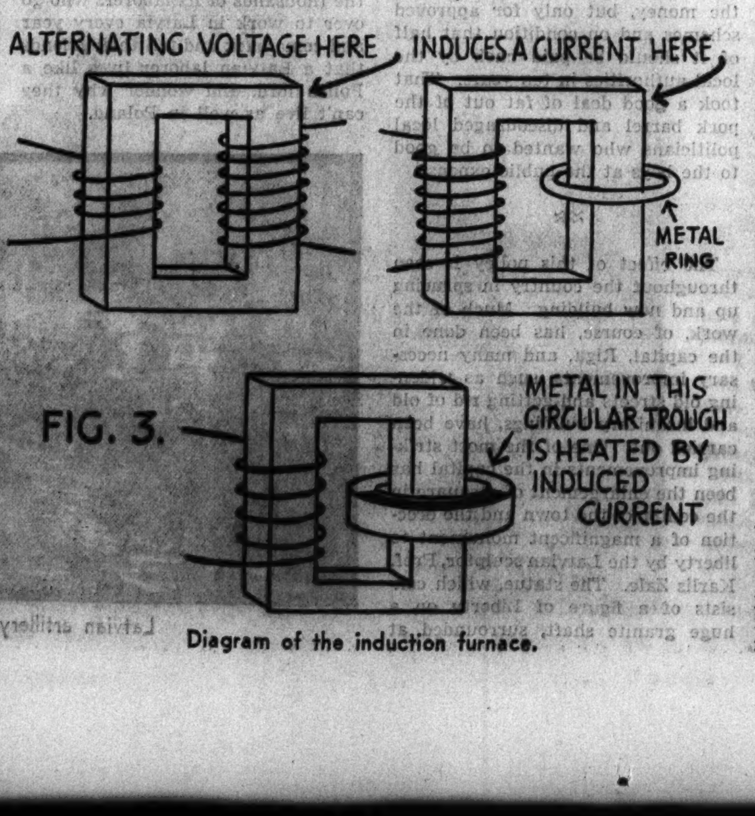


Diagram of the induction furnace.

⁂

These are called eddy currents because of their analogy to the eddies in a fast-moving river. The net effect of a large number of eddy currents is zero in respect to the electricity transmitted, just as eddies in a river do not represent motion of the river as a whole. Nevertheless any single eddy current is still a current and produces a definite amount of heat during its existence, and the sum of all these small amounts of heat may reach a very high total.

There is one peculiarity of an induction furnace that defines the fields to which it may be applied. The arc can be used to heat anything, and the resistance furnace almost anything. However, appreciable electric currents can be induced by magnetic fields only in substances that are good electrical conductors. This limits the usefulness of the inductance furnace to metals. This is not a serious fault, however, as electrometallurgy is a very important industrial field in itself. Moreover, this limitation may actually be advantageous on occasions when it is desired to concentrate the heat in the metal portion of a charge.

An interesting illustration of this fact can be made by placing a wooden stick inside of the coil of a small induction furnace. There is no detectable change in its temperature. But if an iron rod is placed there it is heated to bright redness within a few seconds.

Since most of our electric power comes from the heat of burning coal, one might ask wherein lies the advantage of converting this heat into mechanical power, then into electricity, and finally back into heat, with unavoidable losses all along the line. The answer is that the electric furnace is not an economic source of heat except in places far from coal mines and close to hydroelectric plants. Its advantage lies in the fact that it can do things that fire cannot.

There is only so much heat that can be liberated when a lump of coal burns, and this is spread out over the gaseous products of combustion and the unused part of the draft air. This means that the maximum temperature possible is definitly limited. In the case of the electric furnace there is no theoretical limit to the amount of energy that can be fed into a charge, and consequently no limit to the temperature that can be reached.

Then, too, electric heat insures that the charge will not be contaminated by smoke and ash, which is an important consideration in making certain alloys. A further advantage is that electric heat may be applied on a moment's notice and then shut off when no longer needed.

The uses of the electric furnace are those in which extremely high temperature is important. Consequently they involve a great variety of industrially important reactions. The heating together of lime and coke produces calcium carbide, which is the source of the gas acetylene, used as a fuel or as a raw material for synthetic plastics. The heating of sand, coke, salt, and sawdust gives silicon carbide, or carborundum, the chief abrasive used in metal working.

Another type of induction furnace.

The graphite in pencils formerly was mined from certain out-of-the-way deposits. It is now largely prepared by heating coke in an electric furnace. Carbon disulphide, essential for the manufacture of most rayon, is usually made by electrically heating coke and sulphur.

Electrical heating is becoming increasingly useful in the steel industry. While its application to the making of steel itself is by no means general, it is almost essential to the manufacturer of steel alloys. The melting of iron with such alloying metals as nickel, chromium, molybdenum, and tungsten requires temperatures not easily achieved directly from fuels.

Electricity plays a double part in the manufacture of aluminum. The metal is formed by the electrolysis (decomposition by means of an electric current) of molten rock containing aluminum oxide. The current applied not only frees the aluminum from the fused ore but performs the equally important function of keeping the latter molten.

Mostly About Dogs

By BOB BECKER

Dogs Are Taught Manners

THERE is a growing interest among dog owners in that valuable training feature known as dog manners or obedience. According to our own observations and reports from trainers, more and more dog owners are taking their pets to experienced men for training. During the last few weeks we have visited several training kennels to check on methods and the breeds that were represented in the kennels. We were amazed to see how many owners had placed their dogs in the kennels for training periods varying from a few weeks to several months.

As one dog owner remarked to us when we commented on the way his Airedale behaved after it had received a month's training:

"I have owned dogs for years. Never owned anything very expensive, but I like dogs and always have had them around the house. From now on there never will be a dog in our house that hasn't been taught to behave himself like a gentleman instead of doing as he pleases and often making himself a nuisance or an annoyance."

⁂

Here are canine pupils that have learned good manners in a training class. Martin Hogan has given the command "Sit" to a mixed group in a training class consisting of a clumber spaniel (white), a Labrador, Airedale, cocker spaniel (in front), and a golden retriever. (Tribune photo.)

This dog owner was about to take his Airedale home and bring another to the kennel for obedience training. That was all we wanted to know about the way the average dog owner reacts to the behavior of dogs that have been trained to come when called, to heel when ordered, to lie down when commanded, and to not jump all over people. These are some of the teachings that the average dog owner wants instilled in his dog.

Training a dog to pose and to be obedient in the show ring is good for the dog and the owner, too. Here is a feminine dog owner demonstrating how to pose a Labrador retriever. Notice the steadiness of the dog and the position of its legs. (Tribune photo.)

When we visited a training kennel a short time ago we saw a big variety of breeds in the kennel. One of the most amusing pupils in the school was a wire-haired terrier. It was Zipper, a male wire-haired that was as smart as a whip and knew a lot of tricks. But he never had gone to school to learn obedience, so he wouldn't walk along with you on the street, nor would he come when called.

After a couple of weeks of training Zipper was a changed dog. No more frantic tugging and twisting when on a leash. On the contrary, Zipper walked along like a well-behaved canine gentleman. And he sat down when he was told to. That's what obedience training does for dogs.

One trainer whom we visited brought out the following group of dogs and had them sit down for us: A cocker spaniel that was being trained to eliminate several bad habits; an Airedale that wouldn't obey any commands when it was brought to the kennel; a wire-haired terrier, an Irish wolfhound, and a setter puppy getting its lessons on heeling and other things that it ought to know to be a well behaved companion dog.

Not infrequently a dog that has been taught obedience is saved from death under the wheels of a car. For example, we know of a dandy little cocker that ran out into the street the other day when it saw another dog. The dog was not on a leash, nor had it been taught to heel. An automobile struck the spaniel and killed it.

If this cocker had been taught obedience, so that it would heel when told to and not leave the master's side until ordered, very likely the dog would not have bolted into the street and lost its life under the wheels of a car. A dog that has been thoroughly schooled in obedience and is made to mind by its owner can be put at heel and it will stay there. That is just one of the pleasures of owning a dog that has been placed in a school to learn good manners.

The importance of obedience in a dog that is small or of medium size is known to most any of us who own dogs. But when you own a large dog that may run here or there and jump on people (especially children), the need for the dog to have good manners is even more important. We see this point every day in our 75-pound Labrador. We couldn't have this big fellow around the house if he wouldn't lie down when told to or go to his kennel when ordered. And walking him would be no pleasure if he couldn't be put at heel and kept there when such action is necessary.

Most dogs are not malicious. They want to please their masters and they want to do what is right. But dogs develop bad habits, are quick to see when they can take advantage, and, given an inch, they may take a mile. For example, turn an untrained dog out in your yard. He has had his own way most of the time. You call him. He doesn't come. When you call him for ten minutes, and he realizes that he isn't going to be disciplined or that you will not do anything about it, the pup learns that he can take advantage of you. And nothing is more irritating than a dog behaving like that.

Obedience training teaches the dog that you are master and that he must do what you want and not do what he pleases all the time. When the dog has learned to respect your authority he then becomes more fun around the home and a better companion.

DOG NOTES

This department receives many letters every week asking that a copy of the Tribune "Dog Book" be sent C. O. D. We are sorry that this cannot be done. If readers desire a copy of the beautiful 92-page "Dog Book," containing more than 70 illustrations, orders must be accompanied by 30 cents. This covers the cost of the book and postage for mailing. Orders should be sent to the public service office of The Tribune, 1 South Dearborn street, Chicago.

A select group of pure-bred dogs soon will be numbered among the intelligentsia, according to an announcement made by the American Kennel club. These highbrows of the dog world will win degrees that correspond roughly to human education degrees, such as bachelor, master, and doctor. The dogs successfully passing their examinations after due matriculation in obedience tests will carry after their names such letters as C. D., C. D. X., and U. D.

This emphasis on the intelligence of dogs received its start through the organization of the Obedience Test Club of New York, in which Mrs. Whitehouse Walker of Bedford Hills, N. Y., the secretary, was a prime mover. During 1935 this club sponsored obedience tests in connection with many dog shows in the east. Then early in 1936 the organization submitted its suggestions for regulation of such tests to the American Kennel club. The board of directors of the A. K. C. recently approved these regulations and officially permitted the use of C. D. to signify companion dog, of C. D. X. to mean companion dog excellent, and of U. D. to indicate utility dog.

To win his C. D. a dog must twice score 80 or more points out of a possible 100 in the novice class. The tests are: 1, heeling on leash (20 points); 2, heeling free (25 points); 3, coming to handler when called (20 points); 4, sitting one minute (15 points); 5, lying down three minutes (20 points). Six or more dogs must compete if the score is to count for a degree.

Tempestuous Van Gogh - The Story of His Tragic Life

His Art Triumphs Despite Career of Bleak Despair

On page one of the picture section of this issue are reproduced in colors three paintings by the celebrated artist, Vincent Van Gogh. Next month at the Art Institute of Chicago there will be a great exhibition of the masterpieces of Van Gogh. It will attract thousands of people. Such is the homage now paid to Van Gogh, whose joyous, singing colors and deep love of nature in all her moods brought him after his death a world-wide recognition. His life was a long story of passionate striving, bodily ills, apparent failure, and despair, but his essential story, after all, was in the glowing splendor of his art which he loved, and in his creative work, which was his consolation and supreme joy. And only as we understand what he suffered and overcame do we understand the real miracle of his triumphs!

IT WAS in 1879, as Vincent Van Gogh came to the end of his work among the coal miners of the desolate "black country" in Belgium, that he wrote:

I am willing to sacrifice everything if I can only be allowed to paint. I have reached the point where nothing else matters. When I receive money my first hunger is not for food. I can do without that, no matter how long I have fasted. My family needs not fear for me, even though they shudder at my life down here in the coal regions of the Borinage.

I love these miners with whom I live, these men with bent backs who carry crushing burdens. They are a race apart from other people, and I feel an infinite sympathy for them. There is nothiing I would not do to help them. They are men from the depths of abysses, half famished, despised laborers. All around me is blackened from the smoke and dirt, yet I find this Borinage as picturesque as old Venice, Normandy, Picardy, even.

I sketch the miners going into their shafts, pain-racked and ill with fevers. I sketch their poor huts, their children at play on the floor, their families at supper. My work is crude now, but some day it will be good. I am a man of strong passions, but my strongest passion now is to paint. If I can only continue to paint I will rise on this path I have taken.

About a year before this letter was written a painful incident had forced Van Gogh to give up his work as a preacher down in the Borinage and devote himself to art. A preacher had been lost to the world, but a great artist had been born!

It was early evening in Petit Wasmes, one of the blackest holes in the mining regions of Belgium.

In a windowless board shanty at the edge of some thick pine woods Vincent Van Gogh lay on a pile of straw. He was a tall man with a shock of flaming red hair, a matted red beard, and a coal-smudged face. His beady black eyes were burning with fever. He had been without food for days, existing chiefly on black coffee. He had given away everything that he had, his money and clothing and food, even his bed.

Close around him were gathered some ninety men, women, and children. They were "blackjaws" and their families from the Marcasse mine.

These blackjaws were starving, too, for dark days had fallen on the workers of Marcasse. For weeks they had been scouring the fields for stray things which might be alive—cats or dogs, mice, rats, or snails. Now they were crowding the shanty, which was lighted only by a flickering lantern.

They were listening with gaping mouths to Van Gogh, who was praying fervently for the souls of fifty-seven of their companion miners recently buried alive in a mine disaster.

⁂

To these blackjaws Van Gogh was the "Christ man." They called him by this name. No one had ever before tried to help them as he had done. God was a long way off, but Van Gogh was very close. He had taught their children, fed them when they were hungry, nursed them with his own hands when they were sick.

Now he was ill and hungry, too, and when he spoke it was in a cracked, feverish voice.

"Those who have died are with God," he was saying hoarsely, "but we must not forget that God is with us, too. Sorrow and sadness we know, but it will only make our hearts better. Let us pray. Father, we beseech thee, give us bread, for we are starving——"

There was a sudden loud shambling of feet at the entrance of the shack and two well dressed, well fed men, with shocked amazement on their plump faces, pushed their way through the crowd to Van Gogh.

They were the Rev. Mr. De Jong and the Rev. Mr. Van den Brink, who had come from Brussels to find out how this young preacher of the Evangelical Church of Belgium was conducting himself. They had sent him to the Borinage on probation. Word had drifted back to them in Brussels that all was not as it should be.

"What do you mean by trying to preach in a filthy hole like this?" shouted the Rev. Mr. De Jong. "Where are your clothes? Where is your sense of decency? Have you gone suddenly mad?"

The gaunt red-haired man half roused from his straw and made a feeble effort to explain.

"We are praying for our dead. If you will offer up a few words——"

"I have plenty to offer to you one—if you'll call off your pack of dirty dogs. Get them out of here, and quickly."

Vincent Van Gogh was too weak to protest. He waved to the miners to disperse, which they did, scurrying like scared rabbits through the doorway. When the last of them had gone the Rev. Mr. De Jong glared fiercely down at Vincent.

"You are a disgrace to the church. We gave you a temporary appointment to come down here and preach the word of God. Look at your condition. You've turned out to be a barbarian and a loon. We are through with you. Your work here is finished. Do you understand? You are forbidden to preach another day. If you wish some advice, here it is. Get yourself some clothes and try to look like a man instead of a beast. Your father shall be told about you. All of Etten will hear of it. Good night."

The two men strode out. Vincent watched them as they picked their way gingerly among the ash dumps and coal heaps which lined the path back to the station.

When finally he could see them no longer he turned his face slowly to the wall and wept. This was the end of everything for him. For years he had labored with a fanatical zeal to be a true evangelist and help a suffering world. For months he had been working among the miners, living as they lived. Now he was 27 years old, and he had failed at this, as he had failed at everything he had ever tried to do. He had been turned out of the church, disgraced. He could never preach another sermon.

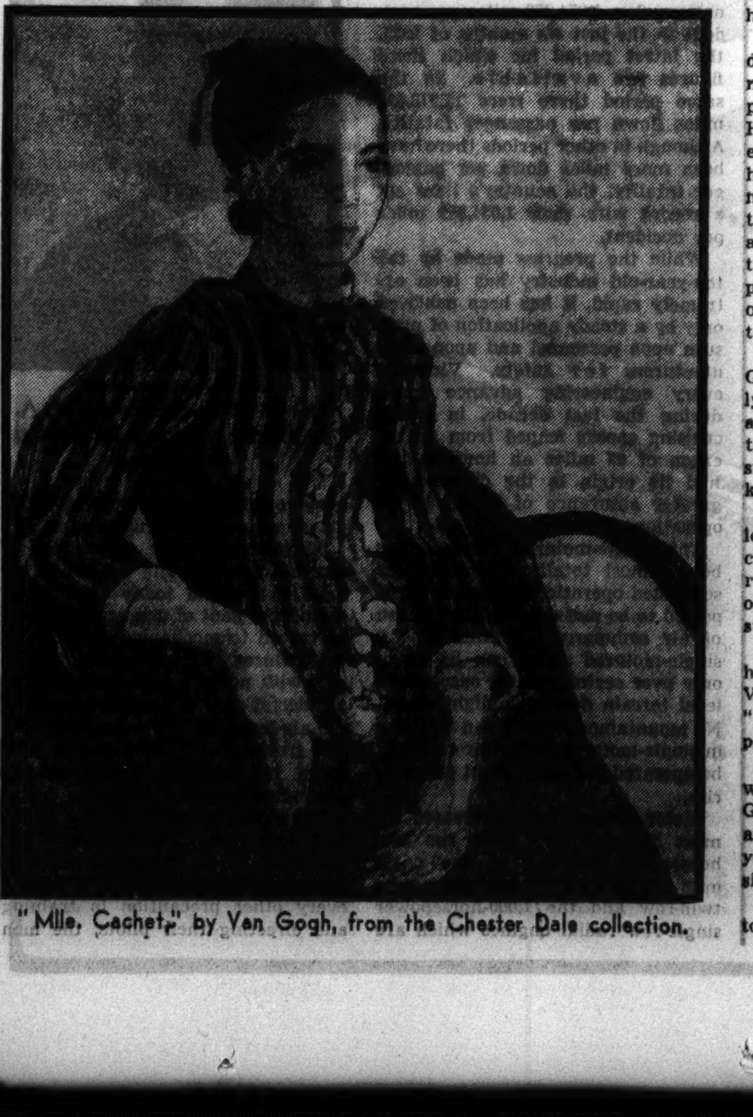
All that night Vincent Van Gogh's half-famished body shook with his sobbing. But as day dawned he became strangely quiet. A new thought had gripped him as the sun's first rays streaked into his little shack. He crawled from his straw and made his way to the door.

"I've been forbidden to preach," he muttered softly, "and so be it. The Lord must not want me to preach. I cannot go against his will. But now I am free to paint! I have always loved pictures. Deep in my soul I have always wanted to paint, to express myself with pencil and brush. No one can forbid me to paint. I will be an artist and help the world with my pictures instead of my sermons. I have failed as a churchman, but I will succeed as an artist. My real work begins today!"

He looked up at the sun, the sun he loved so passionately and which was one day to drench his canvases with radiant light.

"All my life is ahead of me!" he cried, stretching his lean arms upward in the surge of this overpowering idea. "I have found myself at last!"

He walked back into the shanty, his head up. He felt stronger now that his brain was no longer befogged with grief and despair. He poured into a broken cup the remnants of some black coffee which a miner's wife had brought to him the night before and drank it down in a long gulp. Then he wrapped his rag of burlap more tightly about him.



"Mlle. Cachet," by Van Gogh, from the Chester Dale collection.

He must plan out his future very carefully, now that he had broken so completely with the past.

Should he write to his family and tell them what had happened?

His father, a worthy pastor of a small Dutch Presbyterian church in Etten, Holland, would be keenly disappointed. But he would not be surprised.

"I knew it would be so," he would say. "Vincent just can't seem to get along anywhere. It grieves me so when I see that he never knows any joy of life, but walks along with bent head, always choosing the most difficult path. We did all in our power to bring him to an honorable position."

Ever since he was a boy Van Gogh had ardently aspired to enter the church. He was deeply religious by temperament and felt besides that he should follow in the footsteps of many men in the Van Gogh family who had been well known for centuries as members of the Dutch clergy. But his father had refused to educate him for the ministry.

"You are too violent in your ideas, my boy," he had said, "and you are quarrelsome and rude and hypersensitive. Besides all that, you are an idler and will never make a scholarly divine. I am going to send you to the Goupil galleries at The Hague, where you can learn to be a successful art dealer like your three rich uncles."

He was 16 at that time. He had made progress at The Hague and had seemed well on his way to be a prosperous salesman in the internationally known firm of the great Goupils. At 20 he found himself transferred to the London branch of the same firm.

Those had been happy days in London until a disastrous love affair with a beautiful girl named Ursula. He had loved Ursula overwhelmingly. He had assumed as a matter of course she loved him in return. For months he lived in the same house with her, and he planned his entire future life around her. At last, when it occurred to him to tell her of his love, he learned that she had been engaged for several years and was planning to be married as soon as her sweetheart could return to London!

He had not been able to believe his ears. When at last he could find his voice he had cried out roughly:

"It can't be true! You can't marry anyone but me. I love you and you belong to me! Don't you understand that you are mine and no one else's?" As he spoke his long, powerful arms had gone around her and he had kissed her violently.

She had finally managed to free herself. Her eyes were blazing and her face transfixed with loathing and contempt.

"Marry you!" she had shrieked. "Why, you're crazy. I hate you—I loathe you—you great, big, red-headed brute!"

Van Gogh had gone around for days plunged in gloom. He could not even be decently civil to the patrons in the gallery any longer. He felt he had not been truly honest. He had been selling pictures he knew were not always good. He must be a better man. He began telling the customers the truth about the paintings he showed them. If he considered a picture a poor piece of work he shouted his opinion aloud for the whole gallery to hear.

He had not remained long at Goupils' after that. When he finally lost interest in Goupils' pictures and started talking about the Bible to the galleries' patrons, even his strong family connections failed to keep him with the firm.

After Goupils had come his fanatical determination to enter the church. He broke down his father's resistance and went to the home of a highly respected uncle in Amsterdam to study.

"I want to be an evangelist," he had told his uncle, the stern-eyed Vice Admiral Johannes Van Gogh. "I want to help people—not just preach."

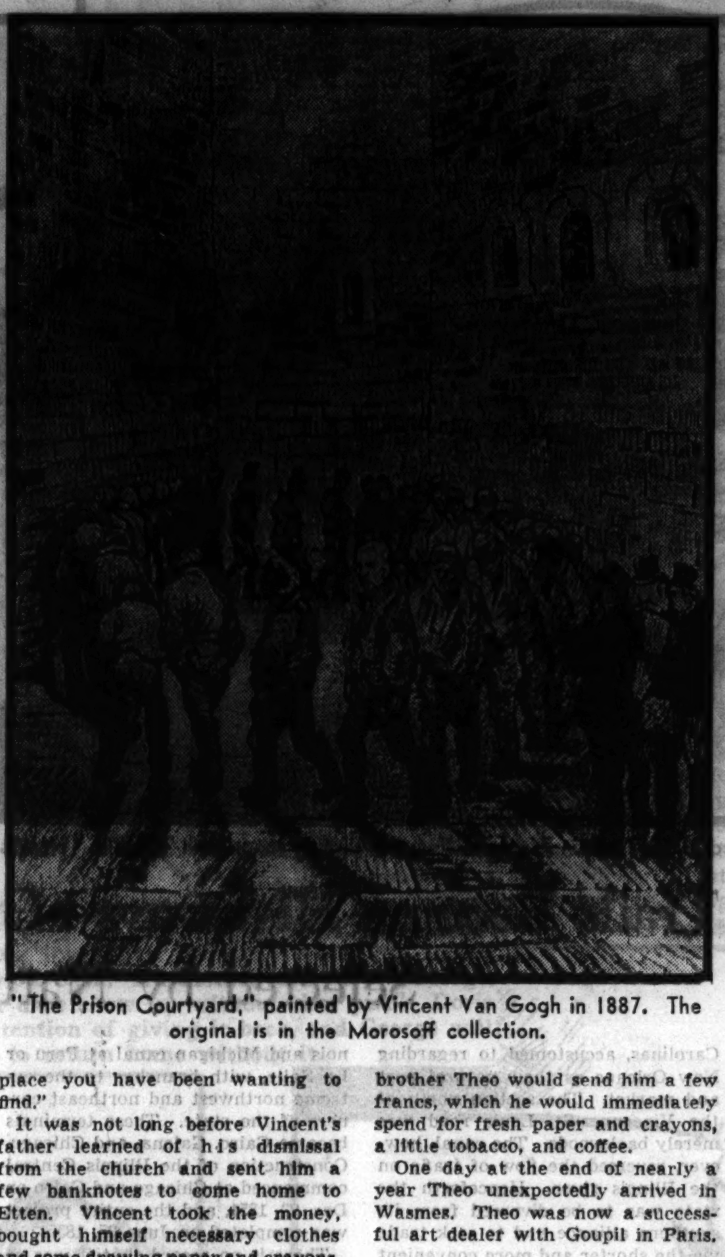
His uncle had frowned. "There will be no evangelists in the Van Gogh family," the vice admiral had answered. "I have arranged for you to be tutored and given a classical education."

So he had made a valiant effort to live up to the family traditions. He worked doggedly at Latin and Greek for twenty hours out of every twenty-four. But his mind was a fog most of the time. Besides, he refused to see that the classics and the triangles had anything to do with suffering humanity.

"The Lord keeps pulling me away from my Greek grammar," he told his tutor one day. "I feel I am about through with all this higher education. I want to do some practical work among people who need help. I want to feed the hungry and nurse the sick and preach to those who really long for religion."

One night, with no warning, he left his uncle's home and made his way to a Brussels school for evangelists. But it had been the same there. He had not been able to get along well with his teachers or to fit in with his surroundings. Only one man at the school seemed to see any possibilities in him. He was the Rev. Mr. Pietersen, who believed that he might find a niche for him somewhere. He had finally persuaded the committee in charge to give Van Gogh a chance at the Borinage.

"Those miners need a man like you, Vincent," he had told him. "The committee is willing to let you go to Petit Wasmes on probation. Those people live under quite terrible conditions, with hardly enough to keep their bodies and souls together. That is just the place you have been wanting to find."



"The Prison Courtyard," painted by Vincent Van Gogh in 1887. The original is in the Morosoff collection.

It was not long before Vincent's father learned of his dismissal from the church and sent him a few banknotes to come home to Etten. Vincent took the money, bought himself necessary clothes and some drawing paper and crayons.

He went enthusiastically to work with a feverish activity which was never to the end of his life to desert him.

He drew the tall chimneys of Marcasse, the shadowy pine woods; he sketched the miners' huts and the families at supper; he caught the outlines of men and women on their way to the shafts and even drew the bleak outlines of the mines and their heaps of clinkers.

Vincent Van Gogh's hands were clumsy. His drawings were bad and his proportions a burlesque, but he kept on putting down everything which he saw around him. He also kept on starving, too, most of the time. Occasionally his father or his brother Theo would send him a few francs, which he would immediately spend for fresh paper and crayons, a little tobacco, and coffee.

One day at the end of nearly a year Theo unexpectedly arrived in Wasmes. Theo was now a successful art dealer with Goupil in Paris.

⁂

He found Vincent sick in bed from utter exhaustion of body. There was no food in his shack—just a little black coffee and a pipeful of tobacco. Theo was genuinly dismayed. He rushed frantically to the nearest store, laid in a supply of food, and prepared a supper for Vincent. The half-starved man ate ravenously and and then settled back to enjoy his pipe.

"You came in the nick of time," he chuckled. "I never was more famished!"

Theo almost wept. "I'd no idea things were like this with you, Vincent. Why didn't you write me? You know I love you, and——"

As Painter He Captured the Sunlight

Vincent waved toward a pile of sketches on the floor. "If you love me, look at my drawings. See if you think they are any good. I think I'm on the right road at last. If you feel I've any talent for drawing in me I'll let you help me."

Theo studied the sketches thoughtfully for a long time. So this was what Vincent wanted to do. If he would only work there was no telling but that he might go far. Theo could not see any genius in those crude lines, but there was unmistakable strength. Vincent must do something. If he had only found himself!

"You must go on with your art work," he said at last. "I think perhaps that it is your real work. You shall study where you will, live where you like. You can go to Paris or Brussels, Amsterdam, or The Hague. It does not matter how long it takes you; I will help you. I will send you money to live on each month. I will stand by you—and you shall make good!"

The two brothers left shortly for Brussels. It was the beginning of a deep devotion between the two men which has few parallels in history. Theo was never again to fail his brother. Vincent was never again to question in what line of work he could be serviceable.

His story from now on is a strange drama of mingled ecstasies and despair, of failure and excessive labors and repeated periods of hunger and exposure. He never knew the value of money. Theo sent him an allowance regularly from this time on, but it was usually spent the first week and he starved the remaining three until the first of the month came around again. Sometimes he spent it for artists' supplies, and sometimes for models, and again he gave it to the sick or the needy. But he always spent it—and suffered himself as a result.

Yet there were compensating triumphs in his life—amazing triumphs, from the dark and splendid paintings of his early work to the full glory and light of his later pictures. And he was definitly started now on the road of his chosen career.

His work as an artist had begun!

Next Sunday there will appear in this section Instalment II. of the life drama of Vincent Van Gogh.

Marajó 'Gators Thrive on Veal

Beasts Slain in Organized Hunts

By ANTHONY PATRIC

Marajó Island, Pará, Brazil.

ALLIGATORS in this big tropical island at the estuary of the Amazon river are not feared by men. They are nevertheless the No. 1 enemy of the cattle ranchers, who suffer an annual loss of several thousand contos de reis annually (one conto is about 50 cents) through the killing and destruction by the alligators of numberless calves.

Marajó Island, which is larger than any one of the smaller European independent states, is the real cattle country of the extreme northern section of Brazil.

The live stock markets of Belem, Soure, Pinheiro, Salinas, and other more or less important cities of the Lower Amazonas are supplied by the great cattle farms of Marajó, where Zebú, Swiss breeds, and other strong specimens of imported cattle are mixed with the native product. French Guiana, including the penal settlement of Cayenne, gets all its cattle from Marajó. Ships are constantly trading between the island and Cayenne, and the smuggling into Pará of French goods, and incidentally of escaped French convicts, is active and brings a nice side profit to the enterprising traders.

Marajó Island is one of the more picturesque sites of the Amazon valley. Its cattle farms are famous for their modern equipment and for their comfort as well as their traditional hospitality. Modern homes, motor boats, fine horses, and old-fashioned carriages always are at the disposal of strangers visiting the island. Automobiles, however, are unknown here.

Alligators are the only danger existing here, but, strange as it may appear, they are not feared by people in the sense of being a personal danger to them. They are feared only as the most terrible enemy of cattle. Farmers and their families do not look at the jacaré (alligator) as a direct personal enemy. They do not even feel in danger when they cross on horseback small streams and half dried lakes. They only fear for the cattle which represent their wealth.

An alligator drive on Marajo Island, Brazil. Ranchers in the foreground are watching natives drive the brutes to shore from a shallow lake. (Photos from Anthony Patric.)

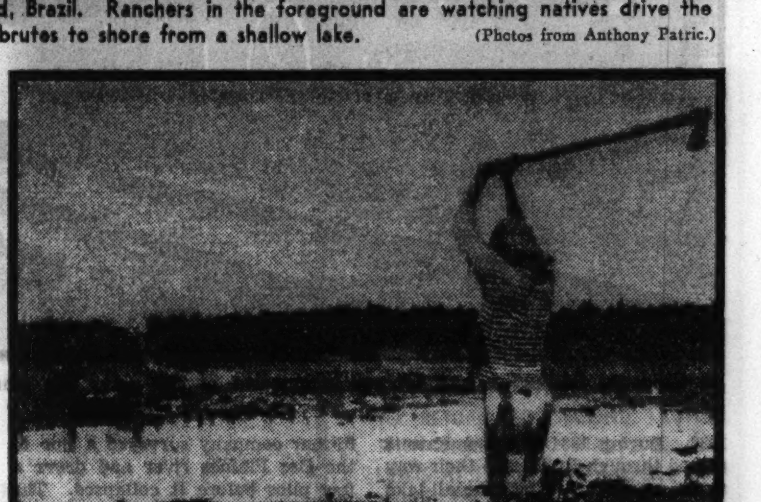
Twice a year farmers organize parties in order to kill the beasts. The small half dried lakes where jacarés live are surrounded by caboclos (natives) armed with harpoons and axes. No shooting is deemed necessary, as the killing of a jacaré with a rifle is not easy unless the shot is aimed right at a spot between the eyes.

The jacaré hunting season is considered by farmers at Marajó as a real entertainment and affords the occasion for the celebration of outdoor festivities. Guests from Belem, Pará, are invited for the week's hunting. Squads of caboclos in the early hours of the morning begin to drive ashore from the half dried lakes their dangerous inhabitants. The harpoons get into action and hundreds of jacarés appear slowly on the surface and are driven ashore. Caboclos have absolutely no fear of the horrible looking beasts. They go right into the lakes up to their waists, shouting and screaming. Their only fear is restricted to the piranhas (man-eating fish) abounding in the lakes. Piranhas seem to know when the slaughtering of jacarés is in progress. They wait alert for the chance of getting at one of the wounded beasts, ready to devour it in a few minutes with their exceptionally sharp teeth. The piranhas only attack men or animals when they see blood on their bodies. Caboclos generally have fresh scars on their legs as a result of insects' biting and are thus an easy prey for the piranhas.



The common way of killing the alligator is by a swift blow of an ax. A native is demonstrating in this picture.

As jacarés are driven ashore, caboclos armed with axes are waiting for them.

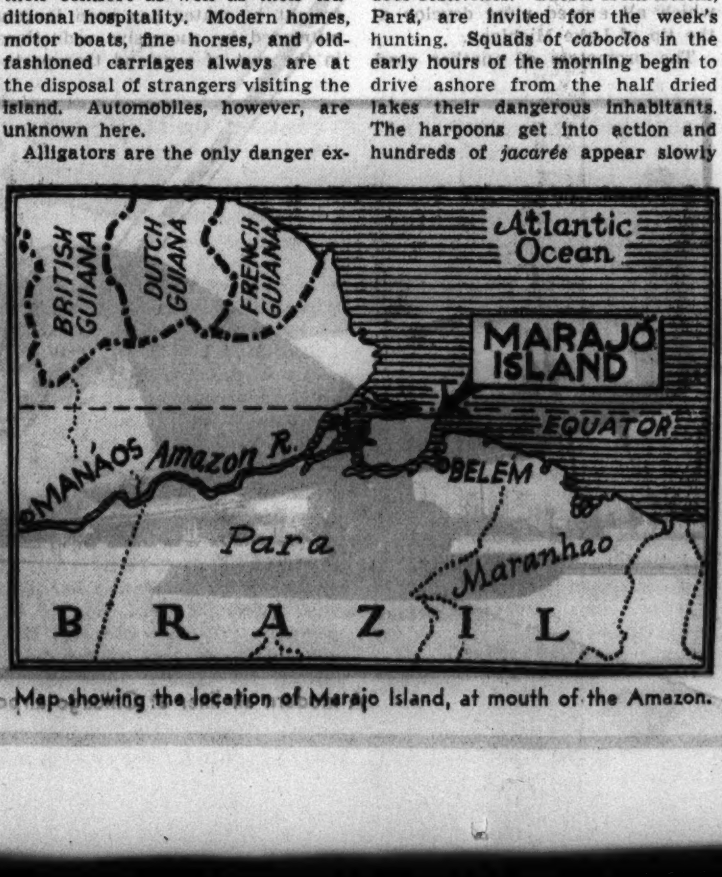
At noon, when the daily hunting is over, quick work follows. Hundreds of jacarés can be seen all around the lake. The fat of the slain animals is collected and caboclos make oil out of it, which is used as a medicine. The teeth of the jacaré also are collected. According to an old legend or superstition, they bring luck, and in Belem there is quite a market for alligator teeth.



Map showing the location of Marajo Island, at mouth of the Amazon.

Each hunting destroys between 1,000 and 1,500 jacarés.

As a rule the jacaré of Marajó Island does not attack men. The female, however, is very dangerous when she watches her nest, which is always built by her ashore at about twenty to thirty yards from the lake. She keeps still with her body under water and only her head showing. If a person happens to walk between the lake and the place where the nest is located the female jacaré goes immediately after the intruder and attacks him deliberately and desperately.

Transportation Centers in Chicago reservation, became Chicago's State street. In the same year Bloomington settlers traced a road through to Chicago. Called by its builders the Old Chicago trail, its northern end was known as Archer's road, finally to become Archer avenue. Fur traders from the Green Bay district utilized and widened the old Indian trail which, with its wet weather detour, became Milwaukee and Elston avenues.

As early as 1819 John C. Calhoun, secretary of war in President Monroe's cabinet, urged the construction of a canal across the Chicago portage, but it was not until 1827 that congress granted the state alternate sections along a five-mile strip bordering the route of the future waterway. In 1830 a canal commission was appointed and the lots offered for sale, marking the beginning of Chicago's civic history.

A canal implied a harbor, and in 1833 congress voted $25,000 for construction. Army engineers started to dig through the neck at the mouth of the river, and the work was completed in the spring of 1834, when the Des Plaines sent its vernal flood down the Chicago river with such force as to dredge a channel deep enough for the largest of lake vessels.

Chicago, as the gateway to Illinois, was now accessible by both road and waterway to the wave of emigration from the east, anxious to reach the rich farming country "now happily free from Indians" as a result of the Black Hawk war of 1832. During 1834 80,000 emigrants passed through Buffalo on their way to the new west. While the all-lake route around Michigan was less arduous, many settlers preferred to disembark at Toledo or Detroit and proceed by road via Michigan City or Fort Wayne; but such roads! Merely narrow clearings, with the stumps seldom removed. Mudholes were numerous, but a convenient and generous farmer usually was near by with a spare team of oxen to help—for a consideration. The vested rights to specific mudholes were, indeed, fixed and recognized. There is even record of the purchase of particularly lucrative bogs by speculators, who thus acquired a monopoly of the trade and, we fear, the "right to maintain" a choice sinkhole.

The stream of migration required revictualing, and what could be a more natural market than Chicago—the parting of the several ways to the interior? This furnished a welcome outlet for the produce of the older settlements along the Wabash. The travelers needed vegetables, flour, hams, and bacon, and trafic in these commodities soon changed "State street" from a fur traders' pack trail to an avenue of commerce. The Hoosier farmers usually camped on the military reservation to the east of "State street" to give Wabash avenue its name.

The Illinois and Michigan canal was opened for trafic in 1848. Its immediate effect was profound. The well settled southern tip of the state was peopled by emigrants from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and the Carolinas, accustomed to regarding New Orleans as their natural port and market. The section north of the Vincennes-St. Louis road was merely backwoods. The canal, however, reversed the flow of trafic on the Illinois river. Henceforth the state was to be divorced from its southern alliance and to seek trade via the shorter and more convenient route through Chicago.

Meanwhile it must not be supposed that Chicago and Illinois were oblivious to the strides that railroads had been making in the east. In 1831 James M. Bucklin, chief engineer of the canal project, recommended the building of a railway instead of the canal. He traveled to Baltimore to confer with the engineers of the Baltimore and Ohio and on his return succeeded in convincing the entire canal commission as well as Governor Reynolds that the railway would be not only cheaper but more serviceable than the canal. The Illinois legislature and congress authorized the change. Governor Duncan, who succeeded Governor Reynolds, reversed the decision, however, and the Illinois and Michigan railway scheme was abandoned.

In 1836 the Galena and Chicago Union and the Illinois Central railroads were given charters. The former company surveyed a line to the Des Plaines river and drove a few piles before it collapsed. The latter got no farther than incorporation. Then came the railway fever. In February, 1837, the Illinois legislature passed the historic internal improvement act, providing for a network of 1,341 miles of railways in all parts of Illinois except the northeast corner, which was to be served by the canal. The then huge sum of $9,650,000 was appropriated and segments of railway were started in both directions in all parts of the state. None was finished except a short line between Springfield and Meredosia, then called the Northern Cross and now a part of the Wabash.

The Northern Cross railway, which had cost the state a million dollars, was finally auctioned for $21,500, and other projects brought smaller amounts. After the internal improvement plan had plunged the state into a fourteen million dollar indebtedness the whole scheme collapsed. Government railway construction having proved a dismal failure, ways and means of attracting private capital were next considered.

During 1849 Senator Stephen A. Douglas championed a bill in congress for a land grant that would revive the Illinois Central railroad scheme. The act was passed Sept. 20, 1850. The railway was to be constructed from a point near the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to the western end of the Illinois and Michigan canal at Peru or La Salle, with branches to the extreme northwest and northeast corners of the state. These terminals became Cairo, Galena, and Chicago. Construction of the Illinois Central commenced at Chicago and Cairo on Dec. 23, 1851, and the entire project was completed on June 25, 1855.

There is no record that it was so intended, but the road acted as a St. Louis cut-off and confirmed the ascendancy of Chicago. It was not solely a man-made advantage. Chicago was in direct contact with eastern and even European markets via its Great Lakes and water-level overland routes, while St. Louis and New Orleans were but way stations on a circuitous journey around the outline of the eastern United States. The other available route, via the Ohio, entailed upstream navigation to the Alleghanies and a mountainous journey beyond.

Coincident with the railway construction in Illinois, eastern transportation was pushing its way toward Chicago. The lake was available for heavier trafic, but the voyage around Michigan and the interruption of the water route in the winter time forced consideration of a railway route from "a point on Lake Erie to a point on Lake Michigan." The construction of the Michigan Central started from Detroit in 1837.

Originally a private enterprise, it had been taken over by the state, which so mismanaged the property that by 1846 it was halted at Kalamazoo. Reorganized as a private industry in that year, it was pushed on toward Benton Harbor, but very shortly the destination changed to New Buffalo. In 1850 it was built into Michigan City. Several bad guesses were made as to the precise location of the transportation center which all agreed must develop at the tip of Lake Michigan.

The promoters of another road, the Michigan Southern, followed different ideas. Considering that Monroe, Mich., on Lake Erie, had advantages over the older town of Detroit, it built a line from that port to Hillsdale, Mich. Next acquiring the Indiana Northern, considered a worthless by-product of Indiana's exploded "internal improvement scheme," it built via White Pigeon and Elkhart into Chicago.

With a monopoly that it did not intend to surrender, this combined Michigan Southern and Indiana Northern railroad succeeded in blocking the Michigan Central's next move—to procure an Indiana charter permitting it to build from Michigan City to the Illinois line. The Southern also was successful in beating off a counterattack when the Michigan Central attempted to oust it from its native state. Then the president of the Michigan Central withdrew his forces from legislative halls. The New Albany and Salem, now the Monon, had procured a charter to build a railroad from the Ohio river to Michigan City, as well as to construct branch lines. The Michigan Central suggested a branch from Michigan City to the Illinois line to be leased to the Michigan Central in perpetuity. It was built in record time with Michigan Central money.

Next an Illinois charter was necessary, but again the Michigan Southern and Indiana Northern railroad proved a better lobbyist. It was denied by the Illinois legislature. Finally the Illinois Central agreed to divert its main line to the Indiana border, and the Michigan Central entered Chicago over the Illinois Central's tracks.

How the pioneer Galena and Chicago Union finally grew to be the Chicago and North Western; how the Chicago and Aurora and the Central Military Tract became the nucleus of the Burlington's present system; how the Rock Island and La Salle developed into the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, and why the great eastern trunk lines found it necessary to make Chicago their western objective have filled volumes, but in each instance the forces were the same. Nature, not man, had selected the site for the world's greatest railway terminal. This condition decided the location of the Pullman company and had much to do with the growing steel industry at Gary.

Because early engravings of Chicago's water front show a veritable forest of masts, it is frequently assumed that with the loss of an export market for western grain, and the disappearance of the lumber trade through the denuding of the white pine forests of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota the lake has largely lost its value as a transportation medium. Nothing could be farther from the truth. When it is remembered that a single modern ore vessel is capable of carrying the load of a whole fleet of those sailing ships, and will make a round trip in a fraction of the time, it can be readily realized that the port's tonnage is now greater than ever. True, the carriage of package freight by water has been largely outmoded by successive reductions in the cost of overland transportation, but in its place have come heavy bulk movements of ore, limestone, coal, oil, grain, and flour—water transportation at its best.

The canal, too, after having served its early useful purpose, became dormant during the frantic railway building era and has only within the last few years commenced to regain its former activity. Here again did the great transportation center attract motor ships all the way from the Erie canal, to enter the rebuilt Illinois Water, the harbinger of water trade of the future.

With the rebirth of highway transportation through the evolution of the automobile, bus, and truck, Chicago's tributary roads again became national thoroughfares. The same force that led to their early concentration at Chicago proved the necessity for their rebuilding as parts of through routes. The stagecoach of early days became the automobile bus of the present generation, and the Conestoga wagon finds its twentieth-century counterpart in the motor truck. A vision of highway freighting of the future can best be gathered by study of the Keeshin transcontinental motor service. This colossal organization grew from an experiment with "long-distance" trucking from Chicago to Aurora, finally expanding to reach both coasts.

Perhaps the least known of Chicago's transport facilities are its six oil and gasoline pipe lines, which come from such divergent points as Kansas, Oklahoma, and Pennsylvania. Not only do they supply the tremendous local demand, but serve refineries from which the products are reshipped by tank car, tank wagon, and tank vessel. A further feature of the area is the gigantic project of the Natural Gas Pipe Line of America, which brings this fuel in a 24-inch main from Fritch, near Amarillo, in the Panhandle of Texas, to be distributed in the Chicago area by the Chicago District Pipe Line company.

Because the development has been so recent, it will be readily recalled that the airplane was developed to such a point of efficiency during the war that many governments considered air mail service feasible. For this purpose continental United States was to be spanned by parallel air mail routes that would crosshatch the country. Army pilots flew the planes.

Meanwhile a few courageous companies visualized passenger service by air and commenced to experiment with flights between Detroit and Chicago. Combined mail and passenger flying would not only reduce the cost of mail service but provide the necessary sinews for the passenger development. The postoffice department leased its mail trafic to a group of passenger lines. The inevitable followed. Transcontinental lines were bent so as to serve Chicago en route from coast to coast. The great transportation magnet could not be denied and a wheel of air lines resulted that closely resembled the railway map.

As in all other eras, we are wont to think that we have now reached the ultimate in transportation, but experience tells us that the future will change the present as much as the present has changed the past. Certainly the incentive to abridge distances with greater economy remains, but develop what it will, Chicago will retain the strategic location that has made it the world's greatest transportation center.

6,889 Tons of Mail Flown in 1935

By WAYNE THOMIS

NO BETTER indication of the sound growth of the air transportation industry in the United States during its first decade of scheduled operations can be procured than is shown by a comparison of current and early statistics. These surprising figures comprise the basis for predictions by men who are the moving force in the industry today that air transportation is "barely finding its feet" and that its expansion will continue even more rapidly in the future.

The little network of pioneering air lines in the country in 1926 carried 5,782 passengers. Last year there were 746,969 paid fares on the nation's 30,000 miles of domestic airways. During that first year of air mail flying by privately owned air lines there was, comparatively speaking, only a mere handful of letters carried. In 1935 the mail poundage had grown to 13,779,608 despite the juggling of mail costs by the postoffice department and the New Deal's disastrous interference in 1933.

As for air express—now the greatest potential source of revenue for the air line operators—there were only 3,555 pounds carried in 1926. Last year this volume had developed to a healthy 5,511,737 pounds, and in 1936 well over 6,000,000 pounds of express will be carried by the nation's air lines.

There is no doubt that increasing efficiency in ships, men, and operating technique has led the way to the trafic which the air lines now enjoy. Federal bureau of air commerce records, which were kept for only the last seven years of scheduled commercial flying, show that the total number of fatalities, including crew and passengers, for the period numbered 222. The great toll in lives has been taken in accidents by private or unscheduled flying. During the same seven years 2,561 persons lost their lives in accidents in which no scheduled air line was involved.

The safety of present-day air line operations is best illustrated by the insurance rates for the air lines as worked out by the Aero Insurance Underwriters. Their latest pronouncement now gives air line passengers the benefit of a lower rate of insurance than is available to the traveler who proceeds to his destination by automobile.

For the air lines the underwriters originally charged $150 a passenger seat, but in 1936 this charge has been reduced by two-thirds to $50 a seat. Public liability rates have fallen from $120 to $50, crash rates from 25 to 12 per cent, and fire rates from 4½ to 2½ per cent.

And the reason for these reductions is found in the air commerce record, which shows that domestic air lines and extensions to foreign nations flew 1,054,882 miles per accident in the last six months of 1935, the latest period for which these figures are available. In the same period there were 17,973,698 miles flown per passenger fatality. Although in other periods there have been more miles flown per passenger fatality, the country's lines set a record with their 1,054,882 miles per accident.

While the progress made by the ten-year-old industry has been extremely rapid, it has been achieved only by a steady application of pressure upon personnel and upon manufacturers for safety. Virtually every engineering advance made during the last decade, in which cruising speeds leaped from an average of 95 miles an hour to 180, had its origin in the demand for greater assurance of safety in all operations.

The single-motored airplane has been almost totally abandoned for scheduled operations and soon is expected to be outlawed by the bureau of air commerce. At this time a single-motored plane can be flown only over certain routes across low, level terrain during daylight hours. No mountainous routes can be flown in single-motored ships, nor can they be operated between sunset and sunrise.

Motor powers have increased almost 500 per cent from the 220-horsepower engines of the early mail planes to the 1,145-horsepower twin-row and the 1,000-horsepower single-row radial engines which are installed in the latest types of equipment. Today, instead of flying at from 75 to 90 per cent of full throttle, the air line operators are seeking to fly at 50 per cent throttle.

This is a distinct safety feature. It gives the pilot a tremendous reserve of power for emergency use which he did not have in the past; it insures almost motor car reliability in engines, because they are never operated at a capacity which places undue strains upon parts.

Maintenance and inspection of aircraft used on the scheduled air lines is so rigid today that fewer than 1 per cent of the accidents can be traced to mechanical or structural failures. Chiefly—and this is said with no intent to disparage the wonderful skill and achievements of the air line pilots as a class—the air line troubles have been due to mistakes in judgment either on the ground or in the cockpits.

The operators themselves recognize this fact. United Air Lines' president, W. A. Patterson, recently disclosed that in addition to taking every other precaution in training and directing their pilots, the men in the cockpits of United's planes are constantly being reminded that their first duty is to "fly safely."

Even when the men are in the air this reminder is shot out to them by radio. It is now a rule that as every flight departs the company dispatcher on duty at the field gives one last admonition to the pilot over the company's radio station. It goes something like this:

"Pilot Jones, the field trafic tower will now take over. You are checked out of here. Remember to fly that ship as if your wife and baby were behind you in the cabin."

In order to prevent the pilots from overlooking this reminder because of monotony in the phrasing, the dispatchers have been directed to vary their words. Sometimes they say: "Bring that ship in safely. Your first duty is to get the passengers down unharmed." Sometimes other formulæ are used.

Other lines have other methods. Eastern Air Lines, which under the active management of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker has set a record for efficiency and safety that has not been approached by any other major line in the world, calls its pilots to sit in at operations conferences, held monthly. There the pilots see and hear all the department heads discuss the safety measures which are being taken.

Captain Rickenbacker has also promulgated a series of rules which leave as little as possible to the pilot's own personal judgment, on the theory that the pilot has enough of a job in flying his airplane.

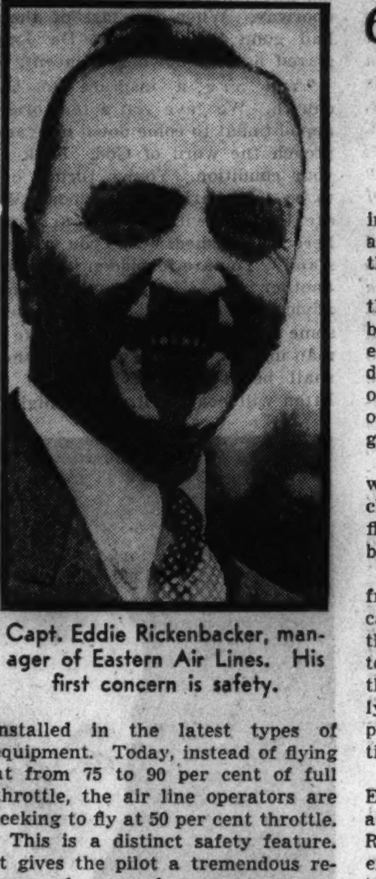
"I personally believe that most of the air line accidents of the past have been the result of a chain of events which is cumulative in its effect. From some seemingly minor failure grows a major catastrophe," Captain Rickenbacker said recently.

"So we've worked out a set of regulations which seeks to cover all the situations we can foresee. Our pilots must land at the first available field whenever there is a failure of any kind, however inconsequential it may seem on the airplane.

"There is no choice of judgment allowed our men if a motor goes bad. They are not allowed to continue flight to destination on the other engine. The same way with their radio. If it's bad they have to land. One day recently one of our pilots noted that one of his engines seemed to be sending out smoke through the exhaust pipe.

"He landed immediately at an emergency field, although his instruments indicated that that engine was functioning perfectly, with plenty of oil pressure, with normal temperatures, and with no indication of broken oil or gasoline lines. He found that the exhaust pipe had become cracked. But this case is an illustration of our principle never to take a chance. That pilot couldn't know in the air that it was only a broken exhaust pipe, although he could conjecture that there was nothing seriously wrong.

"We like to stay on our schedules, and in the main we do, but our first concern is passenger safety."



Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, manager of Eastern Air Lines. His first concern is safety.

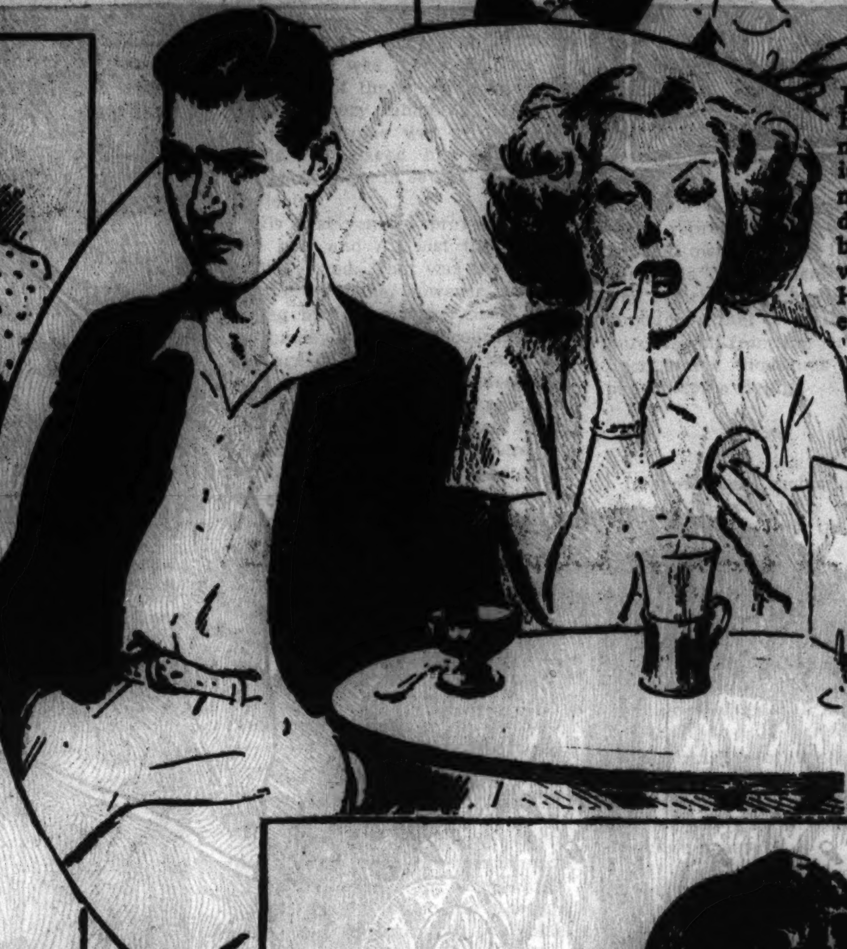
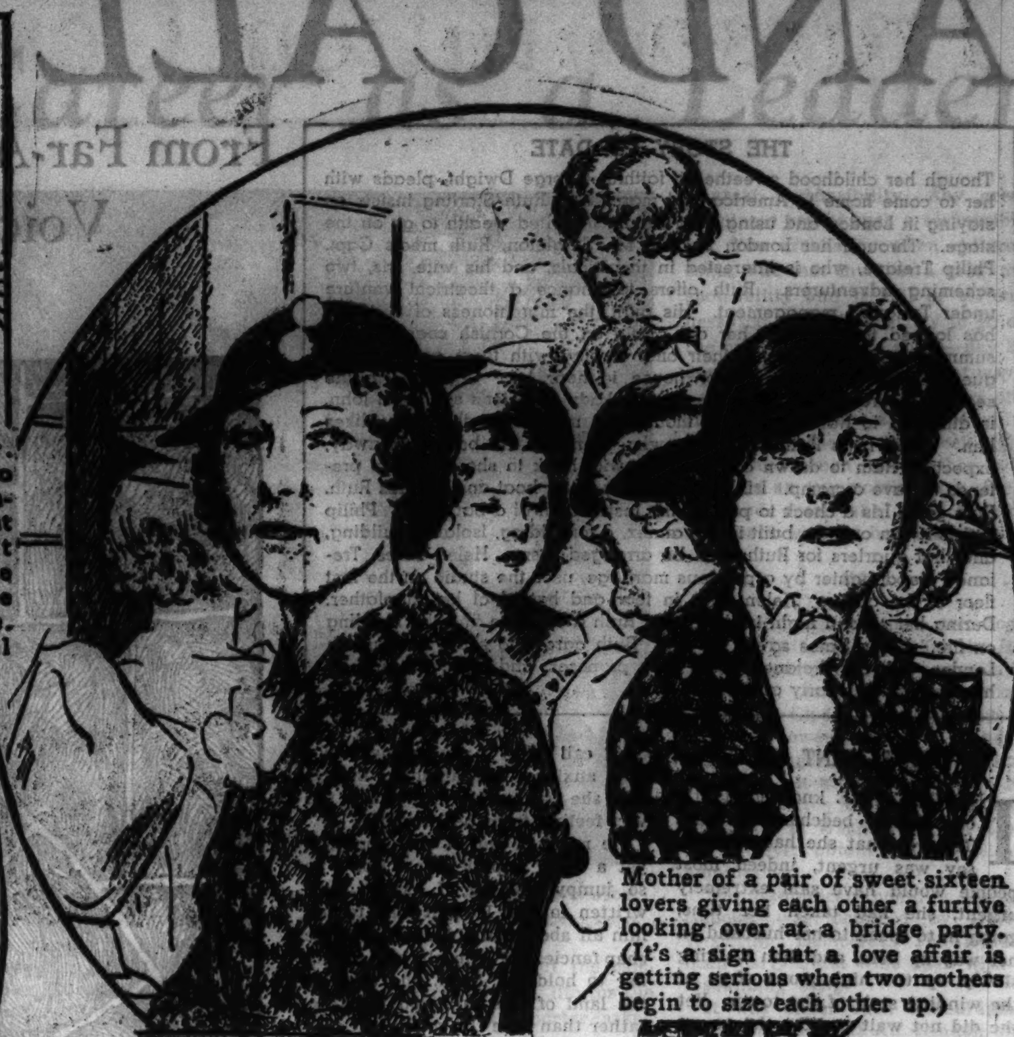
Girl in love with picture star. Wants to hitch-hike to Hollywood on account of terrific crush on Clark Gable. Just knows they are made for each other. Girl chum is much impressed.

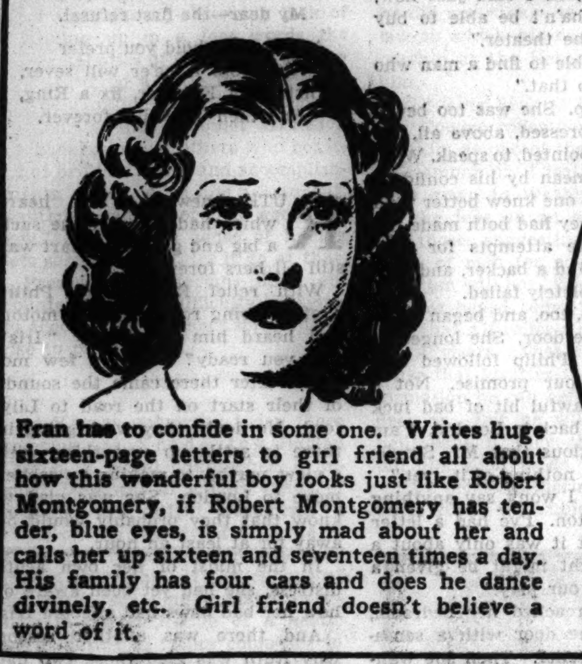


Jealous lover. Harry is trying to make Grace promise that, come what may, she won't dance with any one but him. Grace won't promise. Harry sulks all evening.

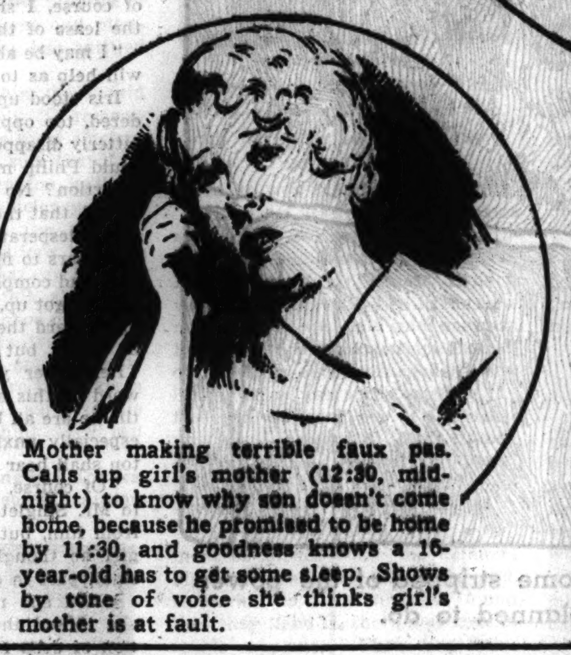
End of big love affair. George wants his school fraternity pin back. His mother said, "Now, George, don't you dare show up without that pin." Doris has no intention of giving it back, and George will be afraid to return home without it.



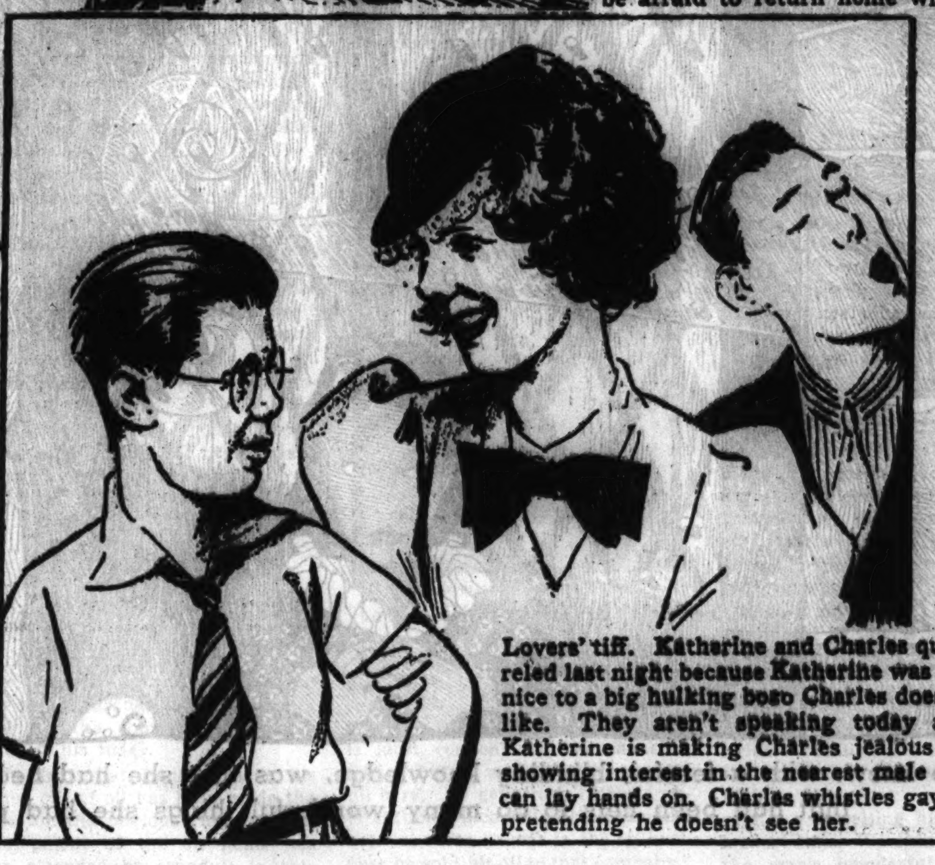
Mother of a pair of sweet sixteen lovers giving each other a furtive looking over at a bridge party. (It's a sign that a love affair is getting serious when two mothers begin to size each other up.)



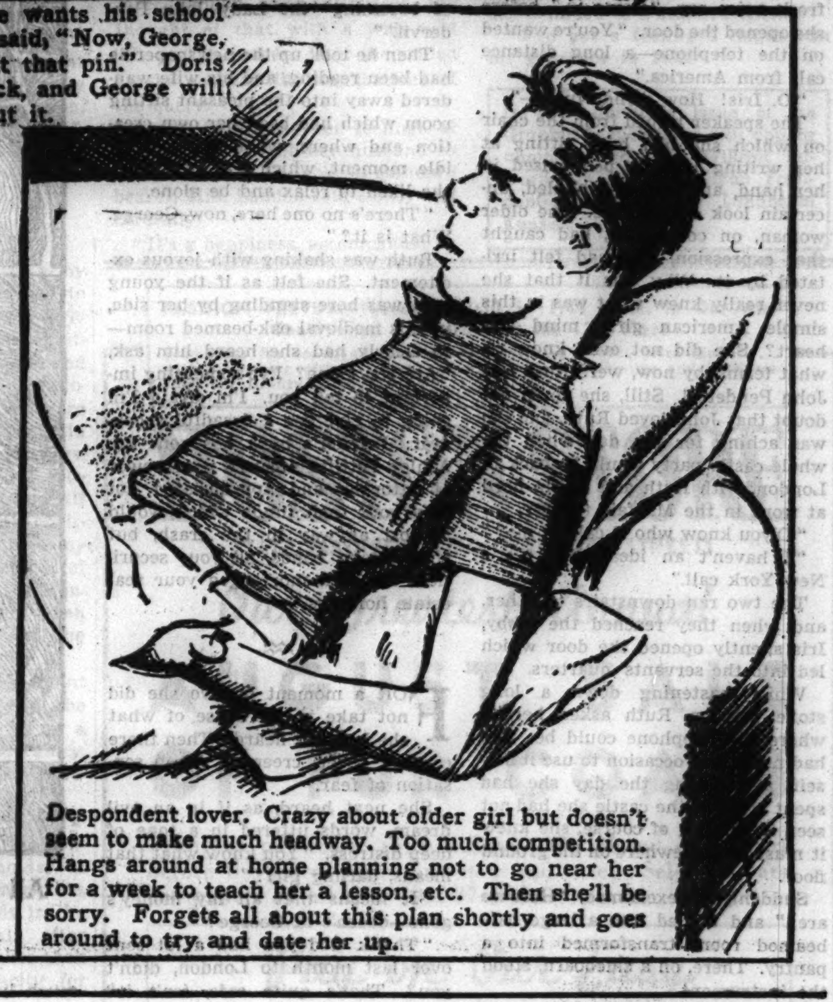
Fran has to confide in some one. Writes huge sixteen-page letters to girl friend all about how this wonderful boy looks just like Robert Montgomery, if Robert Montgomery has tender, blue eyes, is simply mad about her and calls her up sixteen and seventeen times a day. His family has four cars and does he dance divinely, etc. Girl friend doesn't believe a word of it.



Mother making terrible faux pas. Calls up girl's mother (12:30, midnight) to know why son doesn't come home, because he promised to be home by 11:30, and goodness knows a 16-year-old has to get some sleep. Shows by tone of voice she thinks girl's mother is at fault.



Lovers' tiff. Katherine and Charles quarreled last night because Katherine was too nice to a big hulking bozo Charles doesn't like. They aren't speaking today and Katherine is making Charles jealous by showing interest in the nearest male she can lay hands on. Charles whistles gayly, pretending he doesn't see her.



Despondent lover. Crazy about older girl but doesn't seem to make much headway. Too much competition. Hangs around at home planning not to go near her for a week to teach her a lesson, etc. Then she'll be sorry. Forgets all about this plan shortly and goes around to try and date her up.

Baseball Is a Science–No. 7 of a Series of Plays

THE TRIPLE PLAY IS ONE OF THE MOST EXCITING MANEUVERS IN BASEBALL FOR SEVERAL REASONS, ESPECIALLY IF THE SCORE IS CLOSE. IN THE FIRST PLACE THERE MUST BE AT LEAST TWO RUNNERS ON BASE WITH NONE OUT, WHICH MEANS THAT THE SITUATION IS TENSE AND THE ADVANTAGE IS DECIDEDLY IN FAVOR OF THE OFFENSE. THE DEFENSE HAS CRACKED A BIT OR THERE WOULDN'T BE TWO OR THREE ON WITH NO ONE RETIRED, AND IT FOLLOWS THAT FURTHER WEAKNESS WOULD RESULT IN THE SCORING OF A RUN OR RUNS. TO WIPE OUT SUCH A SITUATION WITH ONE PLAY OBVIOUSLY IS STIMULATING TO THE DEFENDING SIDE, ASIDE FROM THE IMMEDIATE VALUE OF ESCAPING FROM A TOUGH SITUATION.

THE ULTIMATE IN TRIPLE PLAYS IS ONE MADE BY ONE PLAYER. AN UNASSISTED TRIPLE PLAY WAS MADE IN THE 1920 WORLD SERIES BY BILL WAMBSGANSS. THERE HAVE BEEN SEVERAL OTHERS IN REGULAR MAJOR LEAGUE COMPETITION, AND TY COBB ONCE NARROWLY MISSED WHAT PROBABLY WOULD HAVE GONE DOWN FOR AN ALL TIME RECORD WHEN HE FAILED BY AN EYELASH TO COMPLETE A TRIPLE PLAY WHILE IN THE LINEUP AS A CENTER FIELDER. HE DID GET A TRIPLE PLAY, BUT HE HAD TO MAKE A THROW AFTER HE HAD MADE AN UNASSISTED DOUBLE PLAY ON A LOW LINE DRIVE JUST BACK OF SECOND BASE.

THE WHITE SOX THIS YEAR HAVE BEEN INVOLVED IN TWO TRIPLE PLAYS, ONCE AS EXECUTORS AND ONCE AS VICTIMS. IN BOSTON, WITH RUNNERS ON SECOND AND FIRST, THE BATSMAN LINED TO SHORTSTOP APPLING. APPLING THREW TO PIET AT SECOND TO DOUBLE ONE RUNNER OFF THE BAG AND PIET RELAYED THE BALL TO FIRST BASEMAN BONURA TO TRIPLE THE OTHER RUNNER OFF FIRST. THE PLAY WAS AS ROUTINE AS AN ORDINARY DOUBLE PLAY, BUT HAD TO BE RELAYED WITH PRECISE RAPIDITY. THE OTHER TRIPLE PLAY IN WHICH THE SOX HAVE PARTICIPATED THIS YEAR WAS EFFECTED AT COMISKEY PARK BY WASHINGTON. HAAS WAS ON THIRD, BONURA ON SECOND, AND APPLING ON FIRST. PIET TAPPED IN FRONT OF THE PLATE NEAR THE FOUL LINE ① CATCHER MILLIES PICKED UP THE BALL, STEPPED ON THE PLATE TO FORCE HAAS ② HE THEN THREW TO FIRST BASEMAN KUHEL TO DOUBLE PIET ③ BONURA REACHED THIRD, BUT PIET RETIRED TO THE PLATE, PICKED UP HIS BAT AND STARTED TO PRETEND HE THOUGHT THE BALL HAD BEEN CALLED FOUL ④ BONURA, SEEING PIET BACK AT THE PLATE, STARTED TO RETURN TO SECOND. KUHEL THEN THREW TO THIRD BASEMAN LEWIS AT THIRD WHO TAGGED BONURA TO COMPLETE THE TRIPLE PLAY ⑤ WHILE THIS WAS A FLUKEY TRIPLE PLAY IN SO FAR AS ITS THIRD STAGE WAS CONCERNED, IT WAS A COMMENTARY ON THE VALUE OF ALERTNESS BY THE DEFENSE AND THE FAULT OF THE OFFENSE IN TAKING SOMETHING FOR GRANTED WITHOUT MAKING SURE, BOTH PIET AND BONURA BEING TO BLAME IN THIS REGARD.

MOST TRIPLE PLAYS START WITH SHARP LINE DRIVES WHEN THE HIT AND RUN PLAY IS ON, BUT THE PLAY CAN BE MADE ON GROUND BALLS, THOUGH A RATHER SLOW RUNNER USUALLY IS INVOLVED IN SUCH INSTANCES. THREE OF THE SLOWEST RUNNERS IN BASEBALL, RIGGS STEPHENSON, CHARLEY GRIMM, AND GABBY HARTNETT, WERE TRIPLED IN CINCINNATI SEVERAL YEARS AGO. HARTNETT WAS THROWN OUT AT FIRST AFTER A SURPRISING INFIELD PICKUP OF A GROUND BALL. STEPHENSON AND GRIMM, BOTH THINKING THE BALL WOULD GO THROUGH TO THE OUTFIELD, OVERRAN THEIR BASES. GRIMM WAS TRAPPED TRYING TO GET BACK TO SECOND AND AFTER A RUN DOWN STEPHENSON WAS TRIPLED TRYING TO GET BACK TO THIRD.

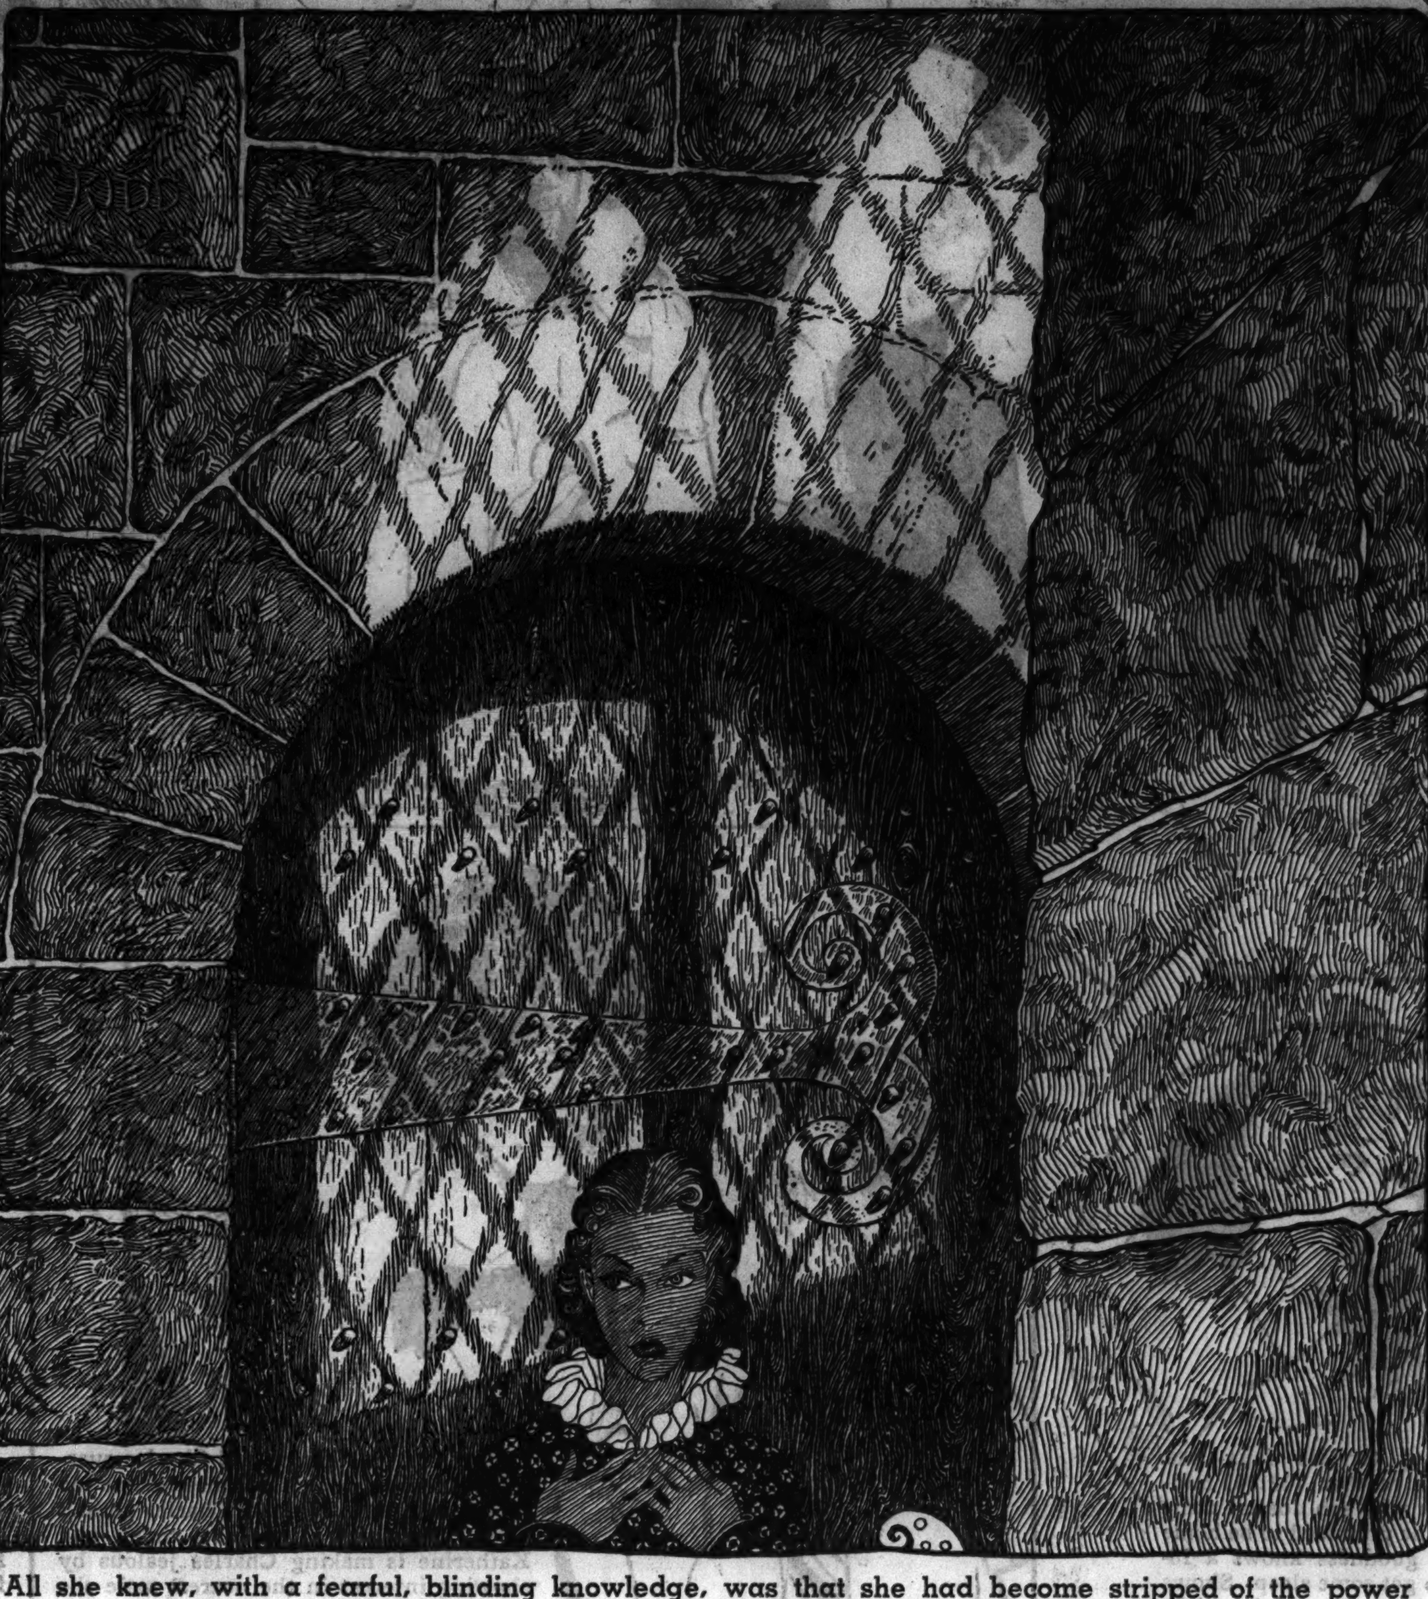
From Far-Away America There Comes Over the Phone the Voice of George Dwight to Bring Dismay to Ruth Starling in the Old Castle

THE STORY TO DATE

Though her childhood sweetheart, faithful George Dwight, pleads with her to come home to America and marry him, Ruth Starling insists on staying in London and using her recently inherited wealth to go on the stage. Through her London lawyer, Mr. Singleton, Ruth meets Capt. Philip Trefane, who is interested in theatricals, and his wife, Iris, two scheming adventurers. Ruth offers to finance a theatrical venture under Trefane's management. His aunt, the marchioness of Cicester, has loaned the Trefanes her old castle on the Cornish coast for the summer, and Ruth accepts their offer to stay with them as a paying guest. Lady Cicester's manor house is near by. Captain Trefane secretly insures Ruth's life in his favor. Lady Cicester's son, Lord John, is attracted to Ruth, and Ruth, though the man is horribly ugly, likes him. Philip rows Ruth out for a swim, then lets the boat drift away, expecting Ruth to drown on the long swim back to shore. Philip pretends to have a cramp. Iris races out in a motor boat and rescues Ruth. Ruth gives Iris a check to pay for the installation of a bathroom. Philip insists it can only be built in the annex, a forbidding, isolated building, and that quarters for Ruth shall be arranged there. Helen Bates, Trefane's stepdaughter by a previous marriage, uses the studio on the first floor of the annex. Helen lives in fear and hatred of her stepfather. During her second night in the annex Ruth awakes to find the building on fire. Helen Bates saves her life. Ruth agrees to share a house in London with the Trefanes. Lord John proposes, and Ruth, touched by his tenderness, nearly accepts.



All she knew, with a fearful, blinding knowledge, was that she had become stripped of the power that had been hers to do many wonderful things she had planned to do.

INSTALMENT XII.

IRIS TREFANE knocked lightly on Ruth's bedchamber door. Though what she had come to say was urgent, indeed most people would have said extremely urgent, she had taken her time, going in to speak to her husband on her way up here, and then walking slowly up the high stone steps of the winding stair of the tower. Yet she did not wait to hear the young fresh voice cry, "Come in," before she opened the door. "You're wanted on the telephone—a long distance call from America."

"O, Iris! How wonderful——"

The speaker leaped from the chair on which she had been sitting at her writing table, a pen poised in her hand, and with a troubled, uncertain look on her face. The older woman, on coming in, had caught that expression, and had felt irritated by it. Why was it that she never really knew what was in this simple American girl's mind and heart? She did not even know on what terms, by now, were Ruth and John Pendervil. Still, she could not doubt that John loved Ruth, and she was aching for the day when the whole castle party would be back in London, with Ruth and Philip hard at work in the Mayfair theater.

"D'you know who is calling me?"

"I haven't an idea. But it's a New York call."

The two ran downstairs together, and when they reached the lobby, Iris silently opened the door which led into the servants' quarters.

While hastening down a long stone passage, Ruth asked herself where the telephone could be. She had never had occasion to use it herself, and during the day she had spent alone in the castle she had not seen it, though, of course, she knew it must be somewhere on the ground floor.

Suddenly Iris exclaimed, "Here we are!" and turned into a large oak-beamed room transformed into a pantry. There, on a sideboard, stood the instrument.

Ruth took up the receiver, but there only came through a loud buzzing sound.

Her hostess observed: "I'll leave you now, dear," yet even so she lingered on till she heard the girl exclaim: "Yes! Yes! I'm Miss Ruth Starling. Who is it who wants me?" And then, after listening for a few moments: "George Dwight? I am pleased to hear your voice!" She listened again before saying, "I'll be alone in a second, George——"

Slipping through the door, Iris hurried back into the great hall. This call from America made her feel anxious. So anxious, indeed, that she was unable to hide how she was feeling from her husband.

He rebuked her, if affectionately, yet a little impatiently, "Don't be so jumpy, darling; I expect she's written to that Dwight man telling him all about old John. And as the chap fancies her himself, he's asking her to hold her hand, and stick to the land of the pure and the free, rather than take the retrograde step of becoming 'the Lady John Pendervil.'"

Then he took up the newspaper he had been reading, and his wife wandered away into the pleasant sitting room which had been her own creation and where, when she had an idle moment, which was not often, she liked to relax and be alone.

"There's no one here, now, George. What is it?"

Ruth was shaking with joyous excitement. She felt as if the young man was here standing by her side, in this medieval oak-beamed room—so clearly had she heard him ask, "Are you alone? I've something important to tell you. I'm afraid I'm going to give you a dreadful shock, dear. Pettifer's bank has gone up. Ashley Pettifer misused your power of attorney and appropriated not only your cash funds which would be lost anyway in the crash, but your stocks, bonds, all your securities. He even mortgaged your real estate holdings."

* * *

FOR a moment or two she did not take in the sense of what she had just heard. Then there came a queer, creeping, numb sensation of fear.

She next heard, as if in an evil dream, words uttered in a tone of deep distress. "You know what that means, darling girl?"

"It means that all my money's gone—doesn't it, George?"

"Thank God you had a lot sent over last month to London, didn't you? That's quite safe, isn't it? Didn't you put it in the Mayflower Trust? Surely you haven't spent it all?"

"No, no," she said quickly. "I have almost all of it left."

"Look here, Ruth. I want you to go right ahead with the London production of your play; I mean 'A Daughter of Heth.' I've been making inquiries in New York, and I find it's cheaper to put on a play in London than at home. I'm told it could be done in great shape over there for two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Now I've got that much lying idle, and I want to invest it in that play."

"I'm grateful to you, dear, indeed I am," she said listlessly. "But I've a lot more money left than that."

She was now shaking all over, and O, so glad that George Dwight could not see her.

"But, Ruth?" and there was a note of great dismay in the clear voice. "You mustn't risk any of that little money you have left, on a theatrical venture. Why, it would be crazy!"

"More crazy for you to do it than for me, George."

She heard his firm voice answer in a tone of finality: "We'll talk that over when I see you."

"When you see me? D'you mean—can you mean—that you're coming to England?"

Her voice was full of unconscious joy and, yes, yearning.

"Why, yes, of course, I'm coming. Sailing tomorrow, as a matter of fact. I did think of not telling you the bad news till we met. Then I thought some damn fool might be sending you a cable of sympathy—the news that you're caught in the smash was in the papers this morning."

In the papers? That somehow made her feel the reality of the awful news she had just heard, as nothing else could have done.

"I'll be in London in six days from now, if all goes well. Will you still be at that castle of yours?"

There was a jealous touch in the way he asked this last question, and over her now white face there quivered the ghost of a smile, as she called back: "We're going to be in London in a very few days from now. I'll send my London address to Mr. Singleton as soon as I know it."

"I've cabled for rooms at the Savoy; don't you think you could come there, too?"

"I don't think I'll do that. I couldn't leave the Trefanes at once, like that; they've taken a furnished house which I was going to share with them this fall and winter; but, of course, everything will be changed now."

Suddenly across the line came a voice: "I'm sorry, sir, but you've had the maximum number of minutes I can allow you for this call."

And then she heard the dear, familiar, strong voice again: "Well, dear? There's nothing more to say, is there?"

"Except that I'm longing to see you," she murmured in a trembling voice.

"Is that really true, Ruth?"

"Of course, it's true."

After she had hung up the receiver, she stood quite still for a few minutes, for she was feeling giddy, and faint, too. Then came a sharp pang of intolerable regret that she had taken no heed of the advice which had been pressed on her both by George Dwight and his father, with regard to the possible lack of wisdom in leaving the whole of her large fortune in Pettifer's bank.

For the first time she realized the power the possession of wealth entails. Till a few moments ago she had been like a child who is sitting on a beach playing with grains of golden sand, and allowing those grains to slip through its hands, secure that all the gleaming store is there, ready for replacement. It was significant, though she was naturally quite unaware of its significance, that during those few moments of intense realization of what had happened, she forgot Lord John Pendervil and his offer of marriage as completely as if he had never existed or played a part in her life.

Part of her brain was as if numbed or atrophied. All she knew, with a fearful blinding knowledge, was that she had become stripped of the power that had been hers to do the many wonderful things she had planned to do.

* * *

AND then she felt a piercing sensation of distress which almost amounted to physical pain, caused by the sudden perception that the loss of her fortune would be desperately serious for the Trefanes.

At last she made her way to the door, and when walking along the passage she felt as if her courage were coming back. But in the lobby she stayed her feet.

To her left was the front door; before her, the first few stone steps of the winding stairway which led up to her bedroom; and, to her right, the entrance to the great hall. She felt certain Philip Trefane was now waiting for her, maybe rather anxiously, to learn what had been the reason for that telephone call from America. Already trouble was overwhelming American financial interests, and the Trefanes, by remarks she had heard them both make, were aware things were going ill in Wall street. She knew Iris well enough to feel certain Philip had been told of that call from New York.

Ruth would have given much to go upstairs, just to be by herself for a while, to try and adjust herself to the awful change the news she had just heard must make in her life. But she was a brave girl, and she felt it would be best to get over what she knew would be an excruciatingly painful moment.

So she opened the door to her right. As she did so Philip Trefane jumped up from the chair on which he had been sitting and she saw at once that she had guessed right, for there was a look of anxiety and of questioning on his face.

For a moment they looked at one another in silence. Then he said rather roughly: "What's the matter? Have you had bad news?"

She opened her mouth, and found she could not speak. Her throat was as if constricted.

"Has something gone wrong with your money?" he asked in a hard voice. She bent her head.

There flitted over Philip's face a curious expression, and as she looked at him, she remembered that he had looked at her like that when they were both in the water, he seized with deadly cramp, and she in danger of drowning, crying out to him to save her.

But that terrifying grin faded quickly, and walking toward her he exclaimed: "I say, Ruth. Quite apart from myself, I'm damned sorry—for you were such a good sport!"

She heard him with a sensation of relief. Yet even as her brain registered what he had just said, she knew that it proved that to this man with her money gone she, Ruth Starling, could no longer count as a good sport.

Still, he actually took her cold hand as he went on: "I'm awfully sorry for you, my dear girl. I mean quite apart from what this means to me. Come over here, and sit down; for you look as though you'd had a knockout blow." He forced her down into a chair, and then: "Wait a mo', and I'll get you a spot of brandy."

She shook her head, and he said: "Then let me get you a glass of water?"

She tried to smile, as she shook her head again.

He walked across to the door which led into the sitting room and, opening it, called out, "Iris?"

Iris came into the hall and, looking from the one to the other, exclaimed: "Good heavens! What's the matter? You two haven't had a scrap?"

She put the question lightly, yet she felt frightened, for they both looked so much unlike themselves.

"Ruth is the matter, darling. She's just had a telephone call from America saying all her money's gone phut. She had left it all in a blasted bank, and the bank has shut up shop. You know what England thinks of American banking methods."

Then he cried: "I say! Steady now!" and rushing forward, he caught hold of Iris. Her willowy figure had begun swaying, and had he not held her up, she would have fallen.

Still holding her, he brought her over close to Ruth, and gently lowered her into a chair. Then he stood looking down at them both—the girl he disliked, and the woman he loved. His poor precious Iris—how he longed to reassure her—but he did not dare say even one cryptic word of consolation.

His crafty, agile brain was working hard, wondering how this utterly unexpected news might affect certain secret arrangements he had made.

It was Ruth who broke the heavy silence. "I want to tell you both that I have a good deal of money left—I mean in the Mayflower Trust in London. There is ample money there to produce one play, maybe two; but I fear that what I can't do now is to buy the lease of the Mayfair theater."

She looked around as she said those words, and felt startled at what she saw there, for the expression on Iris' face was hopeless, as well as desperate. And it was in a despairing voice that Iris exclaimed: "I felt sure something was wrong."

But what was this Philip was now saying? Iris knew by the tone of his voice that it was important, and she listened intently.

"Look here, Ruth! There's one thing I do want you to do for me, and I beg you to do it as a kindness to myself."

"Of course, I will, Philip. What is it?"

"I beg you not to tell any one of this misfortune of yours till we're back in London. You see, I'm really in the middle of my negotiations with the Mayfair theater, and if I can have a little time with everything apparently going smoothly, I believe I may be able to get some one to back at any rate your first production."

"But I can do that," she said quickly.

He observed in a dry tone: "I think you would be very unwise to spend the little money you've got left—if you've really only got saved out of the wreck what is now in the Mayflower Trust company—over anything connected with theatrical work."

"I can dispose of what I have remaining in any way I wish, and I certainly intend to go through with the production of 'A Daughter of Heth,'" replied the girl firmly.

In a sense it was as if the world was still spinning around her, but she had regained something of her composure, and with every moment that went by she the more admired the way this man was taking what she knew must be such an awful blow.

"Even in the last few minutes I've thought out what I can do and can't do," she went on. "I shall be able to give you one year's salary. I mean," she made a quick calculation, "ten thousand dollars. And there will be plenty left to put on the play. But, as I said just now, of course, I sha'n't be able to buy the lease of the theater."

"I may be able to find a man who will help as to that."

Iris stood up. She was too bewildered, too oppressed, above all, too bitterly disappointed, to speak. What could Philip mean by his confident assertion? No one knew better than he did, that they had both made the most desperate attempts for over two years to find a backer, and that they had completely failed.

Ruth got up, too, and began walking toward the door. She longed to be alone, but Philip followed her. "Remember your promise. Not a word of this awful bit of bad luck till we are all back in London. I am especially anxious that Mr. Singleton shall hear nothing of it—yet."

"Of course, I won't say anything to Mr. Singleton. I've had a letter from him, but it was only about a girl he thought might be given a small part in our play."

When she reached her bedroom, she locked the door with a sensation of deep relief. Then she wandered across to one of the high windows. Last night she had almost made up her mind that the stately white house she could just see among the trees should be her future home. Her home, that is, in between an exciting, she had felt sure, successful theatrical career, pursued in London under the happiest conditions.

She had thought of herself, then, as the adored wife of a man who would allow her to have everything exactly her own way—in modern parlance, to lead her own life—while bestowing on her all that the proud title of "marchioness" means in old England.

BUT now everything had changed in her life, and she knew that what had taken place in the last half hour had brought with it far more than the loss of her fortune. It had brought about a complete change in herself.

Dimly, for everything was in a sense dimmed by the shock she had just experienced, she was aware that the loss of her money need not really affect the future which had seemed so near and concrete. Lord John Pendervil would not regret her money, though she was well aware that to his mother this loss of nearly half a million pounds would alter—well, nearly everything. But should she marry John, much as he loved her, and though he would certainly intend it should make no difference, every penny she spent after what she still possessed was gone, would have to come out of her husband's pocket.

Yet deep in her heart she knew that even that fact was not the real reason why all life had changed for her, since she had spent those few minutes with a telephone receiver held to her ear in the stone walled pantry of Perranuth castle. What had changed everything, as regarded herself, had been hearing George Dwight's familiar voice. She had suddenly known—even while he was breaking the news that meant so very much to her—that for good or ill it was George who mattered to her, in the sense that a man can matter to a woman.

She went over to the walnut tallboy which stood opposite the four-post bed, and opened the lowest drawer. There she had put a miscellaneous collection of things she believed she would not be wanting during her stay here, yet which she had not wanted to store before leaving America. She had had them packed in a separate traveling box, and they all belonged to her early life. Letters, papers of different kinds, even little gifts she had received as a child, and had not liked to destroy.

And now she took out from the back of that drawer a large envelope, somewhat grimy looking, and inscribed in a round, boyish hand, "For Miss Ruth Starling."

She drew from the envelope something she had not looked at for years. It was the valentine George Dwight had sent her when he was twelve years old, and she three years younger.

She remembered, now, with a smile and a sigh, how pleased she had been to receive it. And she remembered another thing—she had been slightly disappointed when she had discovered that it was from George Dwight, and not from a grownup gentleman!

Her mother had wanted to put it away, because it was supposed to be close on a hundred years old, and its age made it valuable, as well as quite a curiosity. But she had kept it, always, and as she now held it in her hand, tears came into her eyes.

Round the colored central picture was a lace design, with at each corner a tiny cupid in relief, complete with bow and arrow. At the top of the picture was a funny little cottage enclosed in a heart, and inscribed, "To be let with immediate possession."

By the gate sat a winged cupid in quaint little pink shorts, and a steep path meandered down between two hedges and a little wood.

The path was inscribed, "Love Lane Leading to Hearts' Cottage," and at the end of the lane, by a gate, sat a girl in a pink frock, while close by was yet another little winged cupid, bearing in his left hand a torch.

Within a flower garland formed of roses, forget-me-nots, and pansies, were the following three verses:

"I have a little heart to let,
 Depicted just above.
The fixtures are unvarying truth,
 The rent is—Constant Love.

Before I fix a public bill
 Upon the front as usual,
I think it best to offer you
 My dear—the first refusal.

And if a freehold you prefer
 And from it ne'er will sever,
Instead of Knocker, fix a Ring,
 And then 'tis yours forever.

* * *

RUTH knew that the heart which had now become such a big and generous heart was still all hers forever.

With relief Ruth heard Philip Trefane bring round the old motor, and heard him shout out: "Iris? Are you ready?" And a few moments later there came the sounds of their start on the road to Lilyford. No doubt they were going in there to settle up everything with a view, maybe, to making an earlier move to London. She was glad to know that they probably would be away for at least an hour.

In the midst of her own acute distress, she had yet been aware of how her bad news had affected Iris.

And there was another reason why Ruth was glad those two had left the castle for a while. She and Lord John had arranged to take a walk this morning, and they were to meet in the flower garden. The Trefants never went there, for they had always disliked the Yorkshireman, Troutbeck, and this feeling had become intensified since the fire in the annex.

She found Lord John waiting for her, and at the sight of him came into her deeply troubled and oppressed heart a feeling of reassurance and of comfort. Surely her promise to Philip Trefane to keep her bad news secret for a while could in no sense apply to this close friend. She had but to tell John she wanted no one to know what she was going to say, and she knew that torture would not wring a word from him.

"It's too hot for a walk this morning." He looked at her anxiously, for he had seen at once that something had distressed her.

He was asking himself whether she had made up her mind to say "yes" to his plea, and whether the look on her face really meant that she was doing so at the cost of some doubt, even of some suffering. If so he must give her more time for thought. Anything would be better than that she should marry him because she was lonely and because, with her, pity was akin to love.

But he was soon to be reassured as to that half suspicion.

"Let's go down to the shore, and sit in the shadow of what we used to call 'The Great Rock,'" he suggested.

And once they were seated on the beach he asked in a tender tone: "What's the matter, my darling? Something is the matter, surely?"

Looking away from his anxious face, she said quietly: "Yes, John, something is very much the matter."

Folks Like Landon - Point to His Career as a Leader

Man of Real Ability in Business

INSTALMENT II.

By WILLARD EDWARDS

Lawrence, Kas.

A QUIET, rather hesitant boy of 16 walked across the campus of Kansas university one September afternoon thirty-two years ago. His brown eyes gazed reflectively upon the noisy, shouting youths around him. No one knew what he was thinking. No one paid the least attention to him.

That short, slender lad, who had just registered as Alfred M. Landon of Independence, Kas., made absolutely no impression upon his companions during the following months of his first term at the university. A diligent search by this reporter uncovered no classmate of his who could remember that Alf Landon had been the leader in any activity or distinguished himself in his studies, in athletics, or in social accomplishments as a college freshman.

Yet when Landon returned to school as a sophomore he suddenly was a personality. Despite the fact that he was a year or more younger than most of his fellows, his advice was sought on many matters. The fraternity which had hesitated to bid for such a modest, retiring type found itself following his leadership. He was president of the chapter in his last two years at the school.

When the bright minds of the university concentrated in graduation year upon the all-absorbing task of summing up in a few words the characteristics of the various seniors they faltered a little in attempting an explanation of Alfred Landon's popularity and his quiet ascension to leadership over others who boasted of brilliant deeds and accomplishments. They called him a "student, politician, and thorough good fellow," and, with a sense of having left something out, let it go at that.

Present-day historians often encounter the same difficulty in trying to account for Landon's unobtrusive rise to prominence.

* * *

At Kansas university today there remains one Frederick Raglan Cowles, a genial philosopher, a linguist, possessor of a long string of degrees, who might have had a place on the faculty of any one of a dozen universities, but who had chosen to remain at the college of his youth, spending a placid existence in contemplation of a hectic world, acting as father counselor to the various generations succeeding each other at K. U.

Good fortune had directed me to Mr. Cowles, who sat comfortably in his chair in the Phi Delt house and talked about the Republican nominee for President of the United States. It was the Landon who was his classmate in those days that Mr. Cowles thus recalled:

"There were some good men at K. U. at that time. Alf was one of them. He was a great reader, but don't picture him as the retiring, studious type. He didn't miss any of the parties."

Young Landon became a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. (Calvin Coolidge had been initiated in the same fraternity a few years previously at Amherst.) It was not long before he was running the house.

Many are the stories told of the economies enforced by Landon as head of the fraternity. In order to balance the chapter budget, the ice cream course was dispensed with. A proposal to assess each member $15 to pay for two orchestras and building an outdoor dancing platform for the annual spring party and dance was bitterly fought by Alf, but the fraternity voted him down.

Mr. Cowles was inclined to think that some of these anecdotes were apocryphal. But the fact remained that at the end of Alf's term as president the chapter had a surplus of $240 in the treasury where a deficit had inevitably appeared in previous years.

He reformed the fraternity's bookkeeping system; insisted that the treasurer keep fraternity money separate from his personal funds; required the weekly payment of bills, a practice which astounded and delighted the merchants of the town. The eventual result was to reduce the house dues to a modest $4.50 a week.

Those little economies enforced by Landon in his rule of the fraternity were prophetic of the big economies he was to put into effect when he became governor of Kansas. Landon is celebrated in Kansas for his frugality. He is as careful with his own money as he is with the taxpayers'.

Alf's grades in classes were not the highest, but he was an above-the-average scholar and remembered what he read. After a year of the liberal arts course he switched to the law school and found in the study of the law a great delight. To this day Landon cannot explain why he did not engage in the practice of law to which his degree and membership at the Kansas bar entitled him.

"Looking back at him now," said Mr. Cowles reflectively, "I remember him as one of the most efficient lads among us. I feel sure that if he goes down to Washington he'll fill all the jobs on an efficiency basis. To those suggesting the appointment of men for positions his first question will be: 'What can he do?'

"I've heard some talk about the fact that Alf relies a good deal upon his advisers. That is true in the sense that he tries to get all the information he can before he makes a decision. But he will surprise the politicians if they think they can tell him what to do."

At a recent gathering in a Topeka hotel room the subject of caution in the spending of money came up, and one of the men present, in reference to Landon, said:

Clyde Reed, former governor of Kansas.

"I for one would welcome a President cautious with money."

* * *

Illustrating Landon's watchfulness in the matter of minor details that amount to much in the aggregate, another man present told a story of a local banker who still was grumbling, albeit with grudging admiration, about a transaction with the governor.

"Alf went to this banker to obtain a loan for some purpose," said the speaker. "For two hours he argued with the banker about a difference of one-half of one per cent in the interest to be charged.

"Finally Alf yielded the point and the banker completed the transaction, gloating over the bargain he had won over the governor who is noted for his bargaining abilities. It wasn't until a good deal later that the banker realized that the loan had been arranged without any collateral whatever, that point being neglected by the banker in the heat of the argument over interest."

It was just Landon's strong condemnation of unnecessary and careless spending of funds, either private or public, that won him many votes when he was running for governor.

Peggy Anne, the governor's older daughter, at the age of two, with her paternal grandfather.

One of his first public speeches as a candidate was made before a gathering of four hundred farmers in Elkhart, in western Kansas. Landon was completely unknown in the community. He was pale and nervous. He read from a manuscript instead of speaking extemporaneously, and his audience was accustomed to the free and easy delivery of the usual politician instead of this studied style of address. It was an honest, blunt speech, but with an utter absence of verbal fireworks.

But when he ended, after a moment of silence while the listeners digested what they had heard and, somewhat to their surprise, found that they liked it, there was considerable applause. Then one man yelled to the county chairman in charge of the meeting:

"That man of yours must be honest; he shore ain't a speaker!"

There was a bellow of laughter, Landon went around the room shaking hands, and the meeting ended with almost every person present agreeing that the candidate seemed worthy of support. Pledge cards enlisting the voter in the Landon-for-Governor clubs were signed by two-thirds of those present.

Political observers agree that if it were possible for Landon to stump the country in an automobile, stopping to chat with persons along the road, he would have no difficulty convincing the nation that he would make a good President.

That being impracticable, he must depend upon the radio and major addresses before huge gatherings. Many of his friends believe that his very lack of training as a speaker may gain him many supporters among those sickened with the saccharine flood of oratory which has been poured out on the air in the last few years. And Landon's speeches make remarkably good reading in print.

As some one once said of him: "He talks better than he speaks and thinks better than he talks."

* * *

At the age of 20 Landon was graduated from the university and went home to Independence. During his four years at college the town had passed the oil boom stage and had become a sightly community with a population of 15,000. It was one of the most prosperous cities in the world with a per capita wealth of several thousands of dollars. There were at least twenty millionaires and hundreds of men who could reckon their assets at better than the one hundred thousand figure.

Alf's father was not rich, but well-to-do with his large salary as manager and later receiver of a gas company. He looked fondly upon his son with his brand new membership in the Kansas bar, and fancied for him an illustrious legal career. No doubt the father also dreamed of the son entering politics eventually because John M. Landon had been interested in politics all his life.

But to the elder Landon's dismay Alf announced that he had decided upon banking as a business he would like to learn. With a fine disregard for his law degree, the young man accepted a position as a bookkeeper in the State Bank of Commerce, and later the First National bank. For three years he pored over figures in a cashier's cage, rising finally to the munificent salary of $75 a month.

The decision to learn something of the banking business was reached while he was still in college, but to this day Landon cannot explain to his friends why he came to such a conclusion. The experience, however, was to be invaluable to him. He was given an insight into business and an idea of why some men failed and others succeeded. It was probably in this period that Landon learned the lesson he has never forgotten—that you can't spend more than you take in and not have to pay the penalty eventually.

In such a community, of course, he could not but become interested in oil. Oil was responsible for the existence of the town and its prosperity. Every inhabitant was concerned in some way with the oil fields. Alf saved his money and bought a share in several oil drilling projects.

His first venture proved to be a dry hole and Alf lost the $200 he had invested. That was the gamble of the oil game, however, and the young man who was "close" with his money was not discouraged. At the age of 23 he left the bank and stepped into the oil business with A. H. Black, an old timer, as a partner. They staked out a lease in the Cherokee country of Oklahoma.

The first well in the area struck water; the second struck gas. The third well was to decide whether the partnership went broke or not. The entire country about was interested and the third drilling was watched by hundreds, most of them farmers who owned land in the area. They journeyed from miles around. There was a riotous burst of enthusiasm when oil roared to the surface finally, spraying the countryside with a black film which meant wealth for many.

From then on Landon was an oil man and nothing else for many years. He is remembered well by the oil men as a shrewd and careful trader, square in his dealings, but dangerous when he thought some one was trying to put something over on him.

"He was a square shooter," said a Tulsa oil man. "His word was as good as gold. But it was woe unto any one who tried to trim him!"

From the rueful manner in which this man smiled it appeared reasonable to presume that he had himself tried to "trim" Landon with results unpleasant to himself.

Said another man who knew Landon in the oil days:

"He wanted every nickel of what was coming to him. If there was a dollar going to you, he saw that you got it, and if there was a dollar coming to him, he got it."

* * *

Landon played the oil game as carefully as one can play a game which is largely a gamble. But he saved on drilling costs, was fortunate in his purchases, and gradually built up the comfortable fortune which is his today.

The fact that Landon made his money out of oil has been made the basis for the obvious rumors. The development of the oil fields has been attended by scandals in this country and there has been a tendency to place oil in a separate business category. A person couldn't succeed in the oil game without stooping to unethical practices, according to the arguments of a few.

Harry Sinclair of Teapot Dome memory, for example, was a fellow townsman of Landon in Independence, although he got his start much earlier. Sinclair was a fast moving promoter, a man of 32, when Alf Landon came home from college. He was well on the way to a vast empire built upon his oil deals when Landon made his first cautious investment of $200.

Both friends and enemies of Landon in Kansas were amazed when stories came out of the east that Landon was a friend of the big oil companies. Last March Senator William E. Borah of Idaho issued a statement which seemed to carry an implication that the Standard Oil company was behind Landon's candidacy. Challenged to back up his statement and to make it more specific, Senator Borah insisted that he had not meant to refer, either directly or indirectly, to the governor of Kansas.

Previously former Senator Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa had charged flatly that Gov. Landon was a Standard Oil candidate. Perhaps the best answer to this accusation was contained in an indignant editorial carried by the Tulsa, Okla., World, a pro-Roosevelt Democratic newspaper.

"If Landon is nominated, we propose to take a few shots at him," the World declared, "but they will not be based on trumped-up, baseless accusations for purely political consumption. Hanging the Standard Oil on Landon sounds very much like a jackass braying down an empty barrel and mistaking the noise for facts and profundity."

The record shows that Landon, during twenty-three years of participation in oil field activities, was never associated in any capacity with any of the larger oil companies. He never sold a share of oil stock, nor did he play the market in oil. He promoted no project in which the sale of lease or royalty interests to the public was involved. He was strictly an "independent." He financed his own operations, took his own losses.

Independence was the home of the Prairie Oil and Gas company, a Standard Oil subsidiary. It ruled the county. Landon fought this organization, both politically and as an oil man.

As late as 1930 he was one of the main representatives of the independent owners of the 14,000 "stripper wells" of southeastern Kansas. The Prairie Pipe Line company had announced that it would no longer purchase oil from the stripper wells upon which thousands of men depended for a living.

* * *

Landon waged such a valiant fight that in March, 1931, stripper oil again flowed through the pipe lines. He used every means at his command to influence the public until a virtual boycott was finally in operation against the former purchasers of the stripper oil which had marketed refined products in stripper territory. The big companies quickly capitulated when their income began to dwindle in this territory.

The manager of the garage and filling station a few doors away from the Landon home in Independence contributed an interesting item about the governor.

"Alf has the repair work on his car done here and he buys tires and other accessories from us because it is most convenient," the manager said. "But he won't buy his gas and oil here. He gets them from another station which sells Blank gasoline because when he was in the oil business he sold his oil to that company."

That bit of information about Landon may be termed revealing. He will inconvenience himself to oblige a business friend even though his contribution may be only the purchase each week of a couple of dollars' worth of gasoline and oil from a company which takes in hundreds of thousands of dollars a day.

The young Landon was soon recognized as a "comer" in Independence, and as the years passed by he became the town's most eligible bachelor. He was a disappointment to the town's society, however. He liked reading too much to have time left for evening entertainments. Although generally popular, he had only a few intimate friends.

He was moderately active in civic affairs, was a director of the chamber of commerce, became a member of the Masons, Odd Fellows, and Elks. After his mother died he and his father gave a memorial organ to the new First Methodist church.

He became rather better known throughout Kansas and Oklahoma than in his own home town. In his extensive travels through these states he often spent the night in a farmhouse, visiting with the family. Throughout the day, on these excursions, he was continually stopping to chat with men, building up the wide acquaintanceship that was to help in making his first political campaign successful.

He met the girl who was to be his wife, Miss Margaret Fleming, at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y. They were married in 1915, and a daughter, Peggy Anne, was born to them two years later. But a year after that Margaret Fleming Landon died.

"He was heartbroken over the death of his wife," a neighbor recalled. Alf Landon never discusses those happy three years which had such a tragic ending.

America entered the World war. As a family man who had turned 30, Landon was down in the fourth class of the draft. Nevertheless he decided to enlist rather than wait for a call that might never come. He left his baby daughter in the care of a housekeeper, Miss Teresa Cahill. He chose the chemical warfare service as the place where his services might be of most value, and eventually gained a lieutenant's commission. He was stationed at Lakehurst, N. J. The armistice came before his contingent received orders for France.

* * *

After his discharge from the army Alf came back to Independence to take up his old life as a hard working oil man. He began to take a little more interest in politics. He and his father were both liberal Republicans. They had joined the Theodore Roosevelt walkout on the party in 1912 and were fervent Bull Moosers. John Landon was a Roosevelt delegate to the 1912 convention, and Alf became the Progressive county chairman. Before he went into the army Landon worked for the election of Henry Allen for governor of Kansas. The election was won when Landon was in the army and the candidate in France.

Landon made his first important political appearance in Topeka, the state capital, in 1922. He acted for a few weeks as Gov. Allen's secretary, pinch hitting for the regular secretary.

"We thought he was a nice, capable fellow, but not much of a politician," recalled an officeholder of that period. "It was remarkable, though, how most everybody in the capital was calling him 'Alf' after a short time. We didn't realize then the man's wonderful capacity for making friendships."

Alf went back to his oil business, but maintained a definite interest in politics. From the age of 30 on an attraction for the all-engrossing game grew steadily in him. He continued his trips around the state, often taking his daughter, Peggy Anne, with him. The little girl grew to know the oil fields just as her father had become acquainted with the Ohio fields by accompanying John M. Landon many years before.

* * *

In 1928, when Landon was 40 years old, an age when most men are settled definitly in a routine for life, he made up his mind that the oil business was not to continue to be his main interest. Still, he hesitated when he was asked by his friend, Clyde Reed, to manage the campaign for the Republican nomination for governor.

It was a pretty big job for a man whose political experience was comparatively limited. But Reed, brilliant though undiplomatic, saw what few had yet realized—that Landon was already on his way to popularity throughout the state.

Once he had accepted the post, Landon worked at a furious pace and cracked the whip over his helpers with unrelenting energy. The huge area of the state was covered by workers for Reed. No community was too small nor too remotely located to be neglected by Landon.

Reed got the Republican nomination. He went on to win the governorship, with Landon as Republican state chairman.

While he rested happily after the victory of his friend, Landon became acquainted with Miss Theo Cobb, daughter of a Topeka banker. She was a charming woman, not beautiful, but comely; a gifted musician; simple, gracious, and thoughtful, with a clear outlook on life.

At 42 Alf Landon found himself conducting a courtship. He had not thought of romance since the death of his first wife twelve years before. He married Theo Cobb in 1930, and it is deemed significant by some that his real rise in the political world dates from the approximate period when he first met her.

Topekans, who know them both, say that it was and is an authentic love match. Two children have been born of the union, Nancy Josephine, who will be 4 on July 29, and John Cobb, 2 years old.

In her quiet way Mrs. Landon immediately won the hearts of the press representatives who came to Topeka to find out what kind of a person she was.

She indicated clearly that she intended to stay out of the campaign as much as possible. There will be no campaign tours for her, no speeches, no inspections of public works. She will spend the entire summer at a ranch in Estes Park, Colo., with her children.

Would she write about the campaign or about her daily life for the news syndicates, a reporter asked Mrs. Landon. She dismissed the thought of that with a wide-eyed "O, no." A moment later she smiled as she realized the implications of the query.

Asked to discuss her feelings at the sudden rise of her husband to the post of the Republican standard bearer, Mrs. Landon said slowly and carefully:

"It's a happiness, accompanied by a great responsibility. Any great happiness brings such a responsibility. You are happy when children come, but that involves a great responsibility and is full of seriousness, too. We will just try to go on the only way we can go on—day by day—and make our plans that way."

Mrs. Landon is now 37 years old. Her black hair has a wisp of white in it, dating back to the shock eight years ago when her father was killed in an automobile crash. Slender and erect, she likes to ride horseback, as does her husband.

* * *

The marriage of these two took place in 1930, the year that the Republican party hit bottom, especially in Kansas. As governor the uncompromising Clyde Reed had made a thousand powerful enemies. Landon again managed his campaign, turning down an attractive offer to be secretary of the Republican national committee at Washington, but Reed did not even obtain the Republican nomination.

The Republican nominee, Frank Haucke, was defeated by Harry Woodring, Democrat. The Republican party burst wide open with a resounding bang.

It was under such discouraging circumstances that Alf Landon one day confided to a startled friend:

"I've got a feeling I might run for governor in 1932."

In next Sunday's issue of the Graphic Section there will appear another article by Willard Edwards on the Republican Presidential nominee, Gov. Landon of Kansas.

Young Star Likes Quiet of Rural Life

Ross Alexander Takes Over Ranch in the San Fernandino Valley.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—Hollywood's bachelor rancher is Ross Alexander, who, only a few months ago, seeking to find something that would relieve the tedium of off time, took over a small ranch in the San Fernandino valley. Few single men would undertake such an elaborate setup for home life as Alexander's, but he seems to enjoy it thoroughly.

A visit to his place the other day disclosed Warner Brothers' young star busily putting together a log cabin birdhouse which he will set up in one of the walnut trees near his house. Sounds silly, but the tiny bit of carpentry necessitated the use of quite a few of the tools in the kit that adorns the work bench, one of his special spots out in the barn. Mr. Watson, the huge English bulldog, waddled after us wheezing and snuffing as Ross showed us around.

Giggi and Rose are two little pigs that inhabit a shady pen under the huge walnut trees. Later they'll make good winter pork. Ross doesn't see too much of them, as he says it's a wrench to eat them if they become pets. "The cook serves up a beautiful, golden brown roast chicken. I'm just sopping up the gravy and enjoying things when the cook announces moodily, 'That's Mary,' and my appetite dies," says Ross. "I'm against naming the live stock now. It's too much of a jerk on one's sensibilities."

This Farming Is Done in Light Opera Style.

There is a huge coop of pigeons. While they furnish delicious squabs for the table they're beautiful birds as well and live on friendly terms with the chickens next door, that have lovely nests of spotless straw. It's a sort of light opera farming, neatly and beautifully done, but not too much of it.

There's a disarming amateurishness about some of the slats in the fence and coops that bespeaks the hand of the master of the place. Everything is immaculate with whitewash, and the live stock is almost lyrically clean. Even the pair of pedigreed Toggenburg goats could appear in any parlor. Ross has a small red wagon and harness for them, mostly for fun but useful in drawing up loads of logs for the fireplace.

Hollywood's luckiest ducks happily swim about in a sunken bathtub, arranged for their comfort by Ross. The flow of water is regulated by a floater valve so there always is more from where the last swim and drink came. Up near the house two cats come strolling out, arching their backs invitingly. Ross rubs their ears and talks to them. "I have to have something to talk to," says Ross. "They act hurt if I don't inform them and Mr. Watson how the weather looks for the day and what I'm planning to tell the director the next time he says something I don't like."

There's an elegant bar back in the old barn, a couple of Victorian brass cuspidors, and sawdust on the floor. Amusing pictures of prize fight scenes done in color by some cartoonist of the same period make it quite a man's room.

Ross doesn't drink. He says, "Hollywood's a funny place. If you just like a drink or two and go to a party some one insists that you take five or six. Then they say, 'Who asked that souse? Throw him out.' The next place you go when they offer you a drink you refuse it. They give you the dizzy eye and crack, 'Who asked that holy guy here? What a wet blanket!' It's hard to know exactly what to do, so I'm pleasing myself and drinking nothing right now."

Got Taste for Farm Life from Great-Grandfather.

Ross says he got his taste for farm life and rural quiet from his great-grandfather Kingston, a rural character of prominence in his section of New York state. His grandfather, it seems, had the unofficial record of being the most professional prevaricator in those parts. "Last year a guy won the championship as the year's greatest liar with one of Great-Grandfather Kingston's stories," grins young Alexander. "My favorite was the time he came in out of a bitter New York blizzard and said to great-grandmother as he threw several little lumps of ice on the table, 'Get out the frying pan, mother, and thaw out those things. I said something out in the yard, and I want to see what it was'—meaning his words froze as he spoke them."

Ross, whose real name is Alexander Ross Smith Jr., spent most of his life in Brooklyn and attended Erasmus hall, once the school of the famous Talmadge sisters. He left before graduation, however, "when they found out what was wrong with the school," as Ross tells it.

His break came with the rôle in Blanche Yurka's "Enter Madame," and he made enough of an impression so that other parts followed. He worked in plays with Philip Merville, Francine Larrymore, Frank Craven, Kathryn Alexander, George Barbier, and Alan Dinehart, learning much about acting technique from them.

"That's Gratitude," "The Stork Is Dead," "Honeymoon," "No Questions Asked," "The Party's Over," and "Let Us Be Gay" were Broadway plays in which he appeared before coming to films.

North Side Residents Find Pleasure in Tiny Gardens

By Judith Cass.

CITY gardeners feel they have one great advantage over their country or suburban neighbors for during the drouth it has not been so difficult to keep a small place watered as it is to provide the necessary moisture for large gardens and lawns. Watering pots are sufficient for some of the most attractive city gardens for it is not the size, but the arrangement of the garden and ingenuity of the gardener that provide the charm of some of our most noted near north side gardens.

One of the tiniest and newest of these to provide a bit of green and a place for al fresco dining for city dwellers is the "piece of grass and a few shrubs" at the rear of the house at 119 East Huron street that Victor Elting is calling home nowadays. This is how Mr. Elting describes his little garden, but any one who has seen the delightful little yard that can be observed from the stone terrace where the dining table is set when the evenings are not too cool or too warm, knows his description is a modest one. Mr. Elting will not be enjoying his pied à terre in town during August, however, for he plans to spend that month at the Huron Mountain club in Michigan.

Plan to Leave for Charlevoix This Month.

The George A. Macdonalds, who bought Mr. Elting's handsome Winnetka estate, are enjoying the first half of the summer there, but they will go to their Charlevoix, Mich., place near the end of this month. Miss Mary Macdonald returned recently from a visit in Maine.

The junior John R. Winterbothams will be deserting their attractive house and garden at 1238 North State street in August, too, for their annual summer visit to the senior Mrs. Winterbotham at Sugar Hill, N. H. Mrs. Winterbotham does more gardening at her city residence than she does at their country one in Wayne, for the latter is really only a shack which they use for week-ends and they never have attempted to make it into anything more formal or pretentious.

Johnny Winterbotham, who now is at the Gratiot Washburne's ranch in Wyoming, will be back in time to accompany his parents east when they leave about the 18th of next month. They will remain in the east until it is time for him to return to the Berkshire school for his senior year.

Garden Furnishes Place for Dining.

The Winterbothams' neighbors, the Kellogg Fairbanks, do not use their city garden much in the summer except as a place in which to dine when any of the family spends a night in town during the warm weather, but it is a charming spot, nevertheless, and one they enjoy greatly before and after they are at The Butternuts, their Lake Geneva home.

Miss Janet arrived at home a week ago from Cincinnati, where she was singing in summer opera and has joined her mother and Mrs. Fairbanks Jr. at Lake Geneva. The senior and junior Messrs. Fairbank spend the week-ends with their family. Benjamin A. Fairbank, whose work makes it necessary for him to live on the west coast, will spend his vacation at The Butternuts, but whether he will be there in August or September his parents haven't heard yet.

The poplars and evergreens that live in four feet of earth atop 1500 Lake Shore drive, where the George Woodruffs have the penthouse, are thriving and will provide a background for a party for the members of the Italy America society next Tuesday night. Several doors south on the drive, on the fourteenth floor of the building at 1430, Mrs. Harold Stark's terrace garden is not doing so well because two weeks after the last frost on the ground, her young seedlings were bitten by a late—and high—frost. Various species of dianthus and cactus were planted again, however, and soon the garden should be an exquisite one, all pink and green. Mrs. Stark will not be here to enjoy it, unfortunately, for she leaves shortly for a western trip.

Philip Mahers at Adirondack Resort.

None of the Philip Maher family is here right now to water, or to watch the progress of the petunias, madonna lilies and pansies that grow in their garden at 44 Cedar street, but Mr. and Mrs. Maher will be back very soon from Racquet lake in the Adirondacks. They will remain at home until the end of the summer when they will return east to get their two sons, who are spending the whole time at the lake.

The Alfred P. Shaws have a charming city garden, too, where Mr. and Mrs. Shaw and their two babies have most of their meals. In addition to flowers, shrubs, a pool and gravel paths, the little garden has a plot for vegetables, just as if it were a large, rambling country garden instead of a compact and trim urban one. The Shaws do find it necessary, though, to buy vegetables during the summer, for their garden only furnishes about enough for one of the babies. However, it does provide plenty of mint, parsley and herbs for the whole household.

Cousin Eve Tells Highlights of Trip to Hawaii

The San Francisco Bay and Gibraltar of Pacific at Dawn Scenic Moments.

By Cousin Eve.

HONOLULU, HAWAII.

A long, long trail, many days and nights from Chicago! We go late after a last dinner and game of contract—it's never easy to tear away from the dear old town. The train lashes forth as if the devil himself were after it. It is Iowa in the morning. I had forgotten Iowa's glorious trees and hills and dales. And the lovely farms with a story book look about them. At the stations one wonders for what man these brown Iowans will vote in November.

Then it is flat, dry Nebraska. I looked in vain for the legendary prairie dog keeping bachelor hall with the owl and the rattlesnake. But I saw that Nebraskans believe in new, glossy motor cars. The roads were alive with them. That night we steamed briskly into Cheyenne, where the air was like champagne. No wonder. We were in the Rockies and up 6,000 feet. Although the simple truth is that there wasn't a rock or a Rocky mountain on parade. Only a few drug store cowboys in funny looking trousers and even funnier gray felt sombreros.

Temperature in Nevada Is Hotter than Pepper.

One felt one could do things in Cheyenne, but all one did was climb back into the air conditioned car. While we were buzzing along over the invisible Rockies I fell a-laughing in my little air-conditioned bunk about the boy who described a family of homely gals. "They looked as if they had climbed the Rocky mountains on their faces," he said. Next day it was Utah and the Great Salt Lake, a dull stretch of water. Then Senator Borah's Idaho, and a rather fair helping of Nevada. All the time it was hotter than pepper outdoors, but in the car a heavenly freshness and no speck of dust.

Reno! The train we were on was a sort of divorce special. Each car had its quota of enterprising women with a sulky child or two going to Reno. I stayed up late to see the sights. A mob of citizens filled the station platform to meet the newcomers. Divorces are food and raiment, meat and drink, prosperity, in short, for Nevada. There were men who looked like lawyers meeting their clients. There were rancheros come to gather up new boarders. The chic place to stay is at a ranch out in the country.

I had a friend who went to Reno last fall with two young sons, a governess, and such of her people as came along to see her through the ordeal. The husband father of this family had succumbed to a gold digger. The little boys, broken-hearted over their father's defection, pursued their studies with the governess. She taught them natural history, and one day the youngsters came to table full of excitement about lions. Their teacher had dwelt upon the noble qualities of the lion—what a good husband he was, and how he stuck to one mate for life, and was loyal, noble, true.

Everybody was lunching in the dining room when a clear small voice was heard, "Mamma—lions don't get divorces, do they?" When I saw these humiliated looking children on the train bound for Reno I felt for them. Poor little victims, with their upset lives and tortured feelings!

Crowds on Train Like Those on Ocean Liner.

The long, crowded train had the propinquities of an ocean liner. People met in the club and observation cars. And in the restaurant the men listened to a prize fight over the radio. What a world! Here we were barging through the Sierra Nevada mountains, hearing men whanging one another in the prize ring 4,000 miles away.

I hardly recognized San Francisco bay and the celebrated Golden Gate, wreathed up as they are in long businesslike bridges. It was a charming, pale blue Sunday morning as we swung across in the ferry, and San Francisco loomed, with its high hills and even higher skyscrapers, like the city of a dream.

San Francisco has a certain complacent charm. It is amusing to see the creaking cable cars and the taxis zagging down Nob hill like flies upon a wall. The shops open elegantly at 9:30 in the morning. We looked in at a couple of bright movie theaters and found good restaurants with the best and cheapest food in the country.

Chinatown Streets Hung with Bright Lanterns.

On the way to the ship the taxi driver asked, "Were we going in a Marvo boat?" and skimmed us in behind Chinatown, alive with Chinese milling in the bright sun, in streets hung with red and gold lanterns.

For some time one has yearned for an old-fashioned ocean crossing. A real boat where one sees and feels the sea. The Taiyo Maru was the answer to a prayer. Old-fashioned, handsome, sturdy, of German antecedence, one knew that here was a boat and not a palace. Five hundred passengers were streaming aboard. Tourists have turned west this year and there are not enough ships for would-be travelers. A great celebration by Japanese was going forward on the pier, with confetti ribbons and shouts of joy. Very amusing.

I had heard that Japan does her passenger ships well. She does, and with style, I think I admire. The shining white corridors of the Taiyo Maru are decked with dwarf pine trees in tubs. The colors of the reading rooms and lounge are beige and brown, excellent taste. An exquisite freshness prevails.

The table stewards are smartness itself. Their pique Eton jackets and black trousers are not to be equaled on the Atlantic. The officers are resplendent in black cloth braided in white, or in white duck, of a hot day. A profusion of beautiful flowers makes the dining rooms lovely, and the service is à menu. This part, too, is well done, with an abundance of ripe fruits and fresh vegetables. The food is largely American with plenty of rice.

Tourist Groups Travel with Lecturing Guides.

There are several huge tourist aggregations aboard traveling with a shepherd who lectures them on the sights they are to see and the things they are to do. Mostly they are stout, hearty people from the hinterland. Seeing them assembled the second night at the movie, I believed more than ever in the old Darwinian theory of "the survival of the fattest!" No wraiths on this voyage.

There is every kind of deck sport, a swimming pool, and the latest exhibition of short slacks ever. Even white-haired matrons wear them. This may account for the activities of some Seventh Day Adventist missionaries aboard, father, mother, son, and daughter. Tall, gaunt, Nordic types, with lantern jaws, they gather three times daily at the piano and sing hymns. They sang "Abide with Me, Fast Falls the Eventide," in the morning, bright and early, and got on everybody's nerves.

Came a rough night when the dear old Pacific was really quite terrible. Then the missionaries, tucked away like sardines in a four-berth cabin, became violently seasick as a family, and their whoops and groans resounded dolefully down the corridor. Why was every one so delighted at the sufferings of these Latter Day Saints?

Japanese Make Most Perfect of Servants.

Japanese stewardesses are pretty, and the smiling, bowing stewards are the original "yes-men." "Yessss" is all they ever say. It seemed rather lonely the morning we sailed, sitting in our cabin far from home and friends. No telegrams, no letters, no interesting packages.

An hour or two passed and a small knock upon the door. In marches a procession of stewards: one bears a basket of flowers that fills the cabin; another tugs a hamper of fruits.

One smiling oriental has letters, another a few wires, and a third one or two intriguing little boxes. What a different world! It seems that all these things had been taken to the wrong cabin—confusion of names! What flowers—white stocks, yellow roses, white dahlias, and flame begonias as a base, all combined with a special wizardry!

The Pacific glows a curious blue. Not the vivid indigo of the Mediterranean, nor the gray blue of the Atlantic, but a Persian blue like the breast of a peacock. Strong are the winds from tropic isles. If we sail far enough and long enough we may attain Tahiti and Raratonga and the fabulous atolls made famous by Pierre Loti three generations ago. In the long watches of the night the venerable ship sings her theme song. With a grunt and a groan like a tired old man, she slaps the waves and hums a dirgelike ditty, always the same.

See Gibraltar of Pacific Before Sunrise on Sunday.

It is a lonely ocean, with never a fluted sail, nor signal from a sister ship. At dawn a rich breeze from the south filters into the cabin. It is Sunday, and we come upon mountains that rise from the sea before sunrise. Diamond Head, the Gibraltar of the Pacific, an extinct volcano, guards Honolulu on the right. People laugh at Diamond Head as being a futile looking fortress, but on the other hand history says the place is loaded for bear. The shore line with mountain background is studded with villas, and the huge pink outlines of the Royal Hawaiian and Moanna hotels stand forth.

A brass band on the pier hurls Hawaiian songs at us at 8 a. m. Also choruses of native singers send up their themes of love and welcome.

I was thrilled. My first lei came from Jacques de Veyrac, the French marquis who spent last year in Chicago and who will return there is September. This lei was of pink, five petaled flowers with orange centers. Most enchanting. I walked in the exotic paths that maze the gardens of the Royal Hawaiian. It is an exciting place. One may live there in much luxury and a dream of beauty, if one has the great price. Out in front is Waikiki beach and the smashing white line of its breakers in turquoise waters.

The Classic and Modern Share Honors in Honolulu.

But I am forgetting Honolulu. It is a town of 150,000 inhabitants, and made me think of Newport a little. Perhaps it was our sailormen in the streets and the nearness of the ocean. There are many impressive public buildings of stone with Greek columns, and the moderns, too, have secured more than a toehold with singular, blind looking structures. But low, shaded bungalows in tropical gardens are the residences. Flowering trees fill the gardens—one covered with great splashes of scarlet, another all pink. Hibiscus hedges, trees of jasmine, gardens full of Easter lilies.

To my great surprise Mrs. Walter Dillingham and her mother, Mrs. Charles Adams, had been home a few days from Lowell Dillingham's June wedding to Harriet Barbour in Trenton. Walter Dillingham, whom I expected to see, was in Washington, D. C. Jacques de Veyrac drove me out to the Dillinghams in his car, and I cheerfully can say that it is the most beautiful and livable house I know anywhere. Owing to a lack of time before this ship sails with me for Japan I shall write with more detail of this famous establishment and the notable family in my next letter.

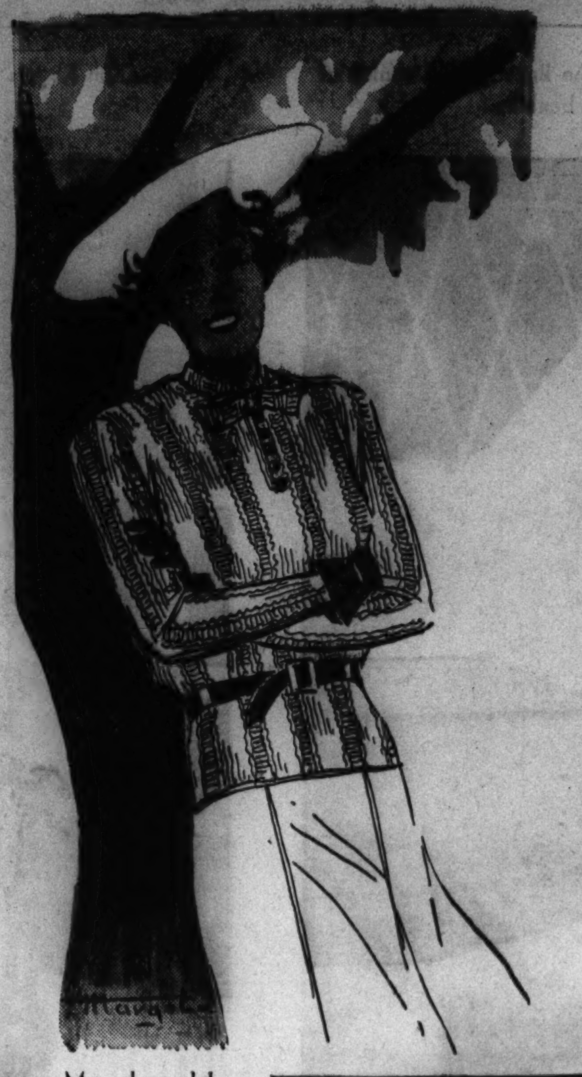
Bachelor Has Servants Who Refuse to Work.

I expect to stay in Honolulu later in the summer, but today Jacques de Veyrac took me sightseeing—first of all to his ducky small villa not 200 yards from the Dillinghams. He, poor bachelor, has a house full of servants who don't like to work and simply won't work. Then to the new boulevard, half of which is a fresh, sparkling canal, cut in from the sea, two miles long. Pretty houses, palms, deodars, along the entire stretch.

Then on to the new park, founded and planned by Lewis McVey of Peoria, a park which already is beautiful. But in years to come it will be one of the parks of the world. At one end is a modernistic pavilion. Into this we stepped. High up on its walls at either end were enormous murals of dark skinned natives of gigantic size. They showed the native in his own extraordinary games of skill. These frescoes were painted by my friend, Robert Lee Eskridge, whom I hope to find here, but he has been for some time at Hawaii, way, way off.

The charm of Honolulu is great. The fierce wind that whirls round Diamond Head over the city tempers the atmosphere. It is hot like a mild Turkish bath. The air is fragrant with cape jasmine and tuberoses, with Easter lilies and unnamed sultry blooms. And everywhere one looks, down every vista, is the sparkling Persian blue of the Pacific sea.

This Sports Blouse Is Knit in a Vertical Stripe Pattern



By Jean Macdonald.

THE three most popular fall styles in hand knits are the dressmaker, tailored spectator sports, and casual, active sports wear models. For these ensembles the patterns used are of the solid variety in plain knitting, and basket and herring bone weaves, plaids, checks, and vertical stripes in pattern knitting. Wools, both brushed and flat surfaced, are popular in either solid colors or tweeds. The yarn also may be combined with silk, rayon, or metal threads. The metallic thread combined with sheer wool is ideal for spectator and dressmaker ensembles.

The tailored spectator sports blouse illustrated today is knitted in the vertical stripe pattern of jade green, with a copper colored silk thread for contrast. The round, copper colored metal buttons match the burnished copper colored suede belt. A knitted or fabric skirt of copper color completes the ensemble which may be worn for shopping, in town, for the races, and luncheons.

HOW TO ORDER

If you wish instructions for knitting the jade green, tailored spectator sports blouse illustrated today, send 10 cents in stamps or coin to Jean Macdonald, CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Chicago. Be sure to send name and address with your letter.

SHE ENJOYS TENNIS

One of the prettiest young women to be found at the swimming pool and on the tennis courts at the Exmoor club every summer is Miss Ruth Johnson, daughter of the S. Parker Johnsons of Highland Park. Miss Johnson's favorite type of dress for tennis is the one she is wearing above, a simple one piece frock, full in the skirt.

Du Pont Infant Has a Cradle in a Seaplane

A. Felix Jr. and His Bride Provide an Ultramodern Nursery for Their Heir.

By Nancy Randolph.

NEW YORK

Aviation has brought about a new situation in family life. The hand that rocks the cradle is pretty well taken up these days gripping the controls.

The A. Felix du Pont Juniors have solved the problem in a rather unusual fashion. Four months old A. Felix III. is now lulled to sleep in a specially constructed cradle that's been built right into their seaplane.

The child's mother is the former Eleanor Hoyt, an heiress in her own right. Mrs. du Pont is as enthusiastic about flying as her husband. As a girl of 16 she took Col. Lindbergh up for a ride in a seaplane to show him a thing or two about flying.

The colonel had just finished testing the ship, but Mrs. du Pont made the best showing as pilot that day. In spite of the gusts of wind, she managed to get the plane off the water in less time than it had taken the Lone Eagle.

All Turf Fans Hurrying to Saratoga for Races.

By next Wednesday there won't be a turf fan left in town. And if you write to any of 'em during the next month, you'd better address the envelope to Saratoga, N. Y. It's a 100 to 1 chance that that's where they'll be. The racing season opens there July 29, and the little town will be a gala place for the next 30 days.

Go through the list of boxholders at the track, and you'll find missing only one or two names of the country's horsey set.

Chicago will be represented by the Warren Wrights, Walter Schuttler, Henry H. Knight, and Mr. and Mrs. James Simpson Jr. William du Pont will be up from Wilmington, Del. Marshall Field will be there. So will the William Woodwards, owners of Omaha.

You can count on seeing the Cornelius V. Whitneys, George D. Widener, George H. Bull, Mrs. R. T. Wilson, Skiddy von Stade, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin, Jock Whitney, and Mrs. Payne Whitney, Tommy Hitchcock, 'Brose Clark [but of course], Ogden L. Mills, and Charles H. Thieriot.

Southampton Isn't What It Used to Be Before '29.

The season will continue on through Aug. 29. A number of people have had cottages leased several months in advance so as to be sure of getting accommodations.

A great many things aren't what they once were, including Southampton. From the most giddy and glittering summer resort in America during the halcyon days of 1928-'29, it has plunged into innocuous desuetude.

Other resorts—Palm Beach, Newport, and East Hampton—have pulled themselves up by their boot straps in the meantime, but Southampton still runs along on the shoe-string basis of its depression years.

Money was no object in this resort 10 years ago. The second generation was spending the get-rich-quick millions of its fathers as, for instance, the late Col. Henry H. Rogers and his Standard Oil dollars, and Mrs. Jessie Woolworth Donahue and her chain store cash. And then there were the fortunes of such successful stock market operators as John W. Kiser, and such bankers as Charles E. Mitchell.

Today, both the Rogers homes, the big villa fronting the Atlantic at Southampton, and the grandiose Port of Missing Men, a hunting lodge a few miles away on North Sea, are closed, and the entire estate in bitter family litigation.

Jessie Donahue, weary of Southampton, hasn't opened her palatial home with its lovely private beach and big, inclosed swimming pool in several seasons. She's preferred the Tyrol in recent years, and the estate here is for sale.

The beautiful Georgian mansion finished by the Kisers about the time the market went boom, isn't occupied this season. Mr. Kiser is living in quarters originally designed for the chauffeur. It'd cost a fortune to run the big house which has been opened only two or three times since its completion.

The Charlie Mitchells, who once entertained so brilliantly and constantly [even Brig. Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt came down from Newport for an annual visit], are living here quietly.

Number of Vacant Houses at Resort Are Amazing.

I drove about the resort recently, and was amazed by the number of vacant houses. Even with rents from one third to one quarter what they once were, there's no sale. Of course, many of the huge, rambling old wooden structures are scarcely livable. Age has made the plumbing obsolete and the wiring defective. Even in their hey-day they were known as "servants' boarding houses" because they required such large stafs. One old barn, Meadowmere, is being torn down.

Children and grandchildren who have inherited these houses built 40 and 50 years ago can't afford to open them, or prefer a more simple mode of life.

Yet, if a family wishes to come to Southampton, it's almost forced to take a house if they want any comfort at all. There's not as much as one modern, fireproof hotel in the village. It's no fun spending a midsummer vacation in an old fashioned frame boarding house, which is exactly what Southampton's hotels are.

Southampton No Longer Has Gay Younger Set.

Once upon a time, every one believed Southampton would develop into a northern Palm Beach. But the depression killed off the gay younger set that was beginning to settle there in numbers in 1928-'29, and now the resort is back in the hands of its old line conservatives, who'd sooner blackball a new family seeking admission to the beach or the meadow clubs than look at them.

If a family can't bathe at the beach or play tennis at the Meadow club, it had best stay at home. Consequently, newcomers are a little bit chary of Southampton. They're going on to some of the other Hamptons to spend their money, and are giving Southampton back to the Indians.

As far as the entertaining goes, there are the usual small scale dinners and luncheons there throughout the week, and extra week-end events. But not a single large private ball has been announced this season, not even during Tennis week in August. In the old days, there was a big dance every night at some villa during Tennis week, just as there still is in Newport. At that, Southampton remains one of the most beautiful summer resorts in this country.

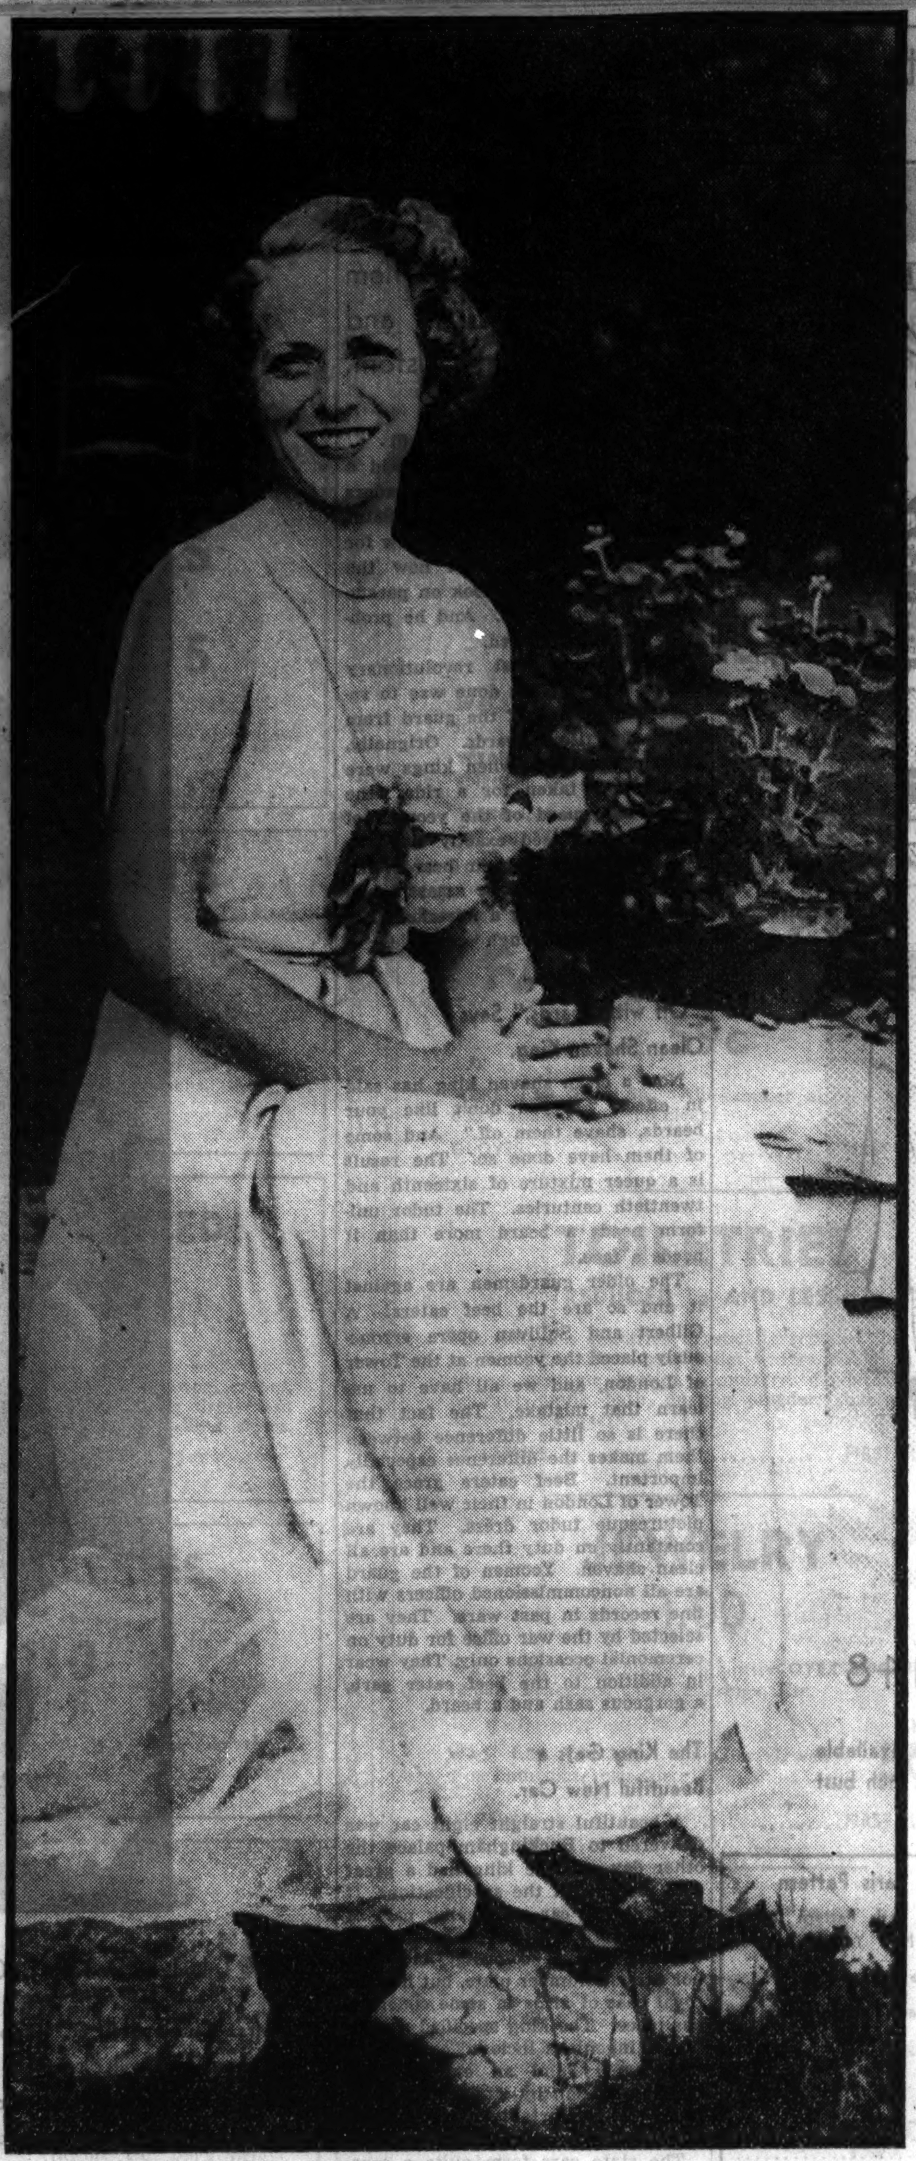
Jock Whitney is due back in New York any day now. He planned to stay in England only about two weeks, going over to take care of some business connected with his color film interests. Another reason for the journey was to direct the moving of Blenheim, winner of the English Derby in 1930, to Kentucky.

Syndicate Purchases Horse from the Great Aga Khan.

The horse recently was purchased by a syndicate of American sportsmen from Aga Khan, who ranks with the world's wealthiest men, as well as being the spiritual leader of the Moslems.

The syndicate is said to include, besides Jock Whitney, Warren Wright of Chicago, Mrs. Thomas H. Somerville, John B. Hertz, William du Pont, and R. A. Fairbairn. These people put up between $200,000 and $300,000 to buy the horse, which will be taken to the stud farm of A. B. Hancock in Bourbon county, Kentucky. Although the exact amount of money which changed hands has not been published it was reported that it was a near record price for stallions.

During his stay in England Mr. Whitney visited friends and relatives there. His cousin, Lady Dorothy Paget, daughter of the first Lord Queensborough, whose first wife was the late Pauline Whitney, is the owner of Golden Miller, which won the Grand National at Aintree two years ago. Pauline Whitney was the daughter of William C. Whitney, who set up the Whitney racing stables.



PLANS WEDDING FOR DECEMBER

Miss Frances Bode Weary, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin F. Weary, will become the bride next December of John Allen Kovas, to whom her engagement was announced recently. Mr. and Mrs. Weary, residents of Chicago's south side, are living in Winnetka this summer. Miss Weary is one of the Chicago Junior league's most active members.

Luncheon Being Given in His Honor at Mount Hope Farm Wednesday.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, who is the former Miss Alta Rockefeller, daughter of John D. Rockefeller Sr., has issued invitations for a 73d birthday luncheon to be given Wednesday at Mount Hope farm, Williamstown, in honor of her husband. Col. Prentice was born at Davenport, Ia., July 29, 1863, was graduated from Amherst college in 1885, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1886. He is the author of several books, and has written the words to a number of songs, one of which recently was sung at a Mount Hope musical.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Stewart have as guest at Eden Hill, Stockbridge, Gerald S. Smith of New Canaan, Conn., who was judge of polo mounts at the Lenox Horse show. Earlier last week their guests were Mrs. H. E. Patton of Rushville, Ind., and Mrs. Samuel Benbrook of Los Angeles, Cal.

Association Petitions for Abatement of Taxes.

The South Mountain association of Pittsfield has petitioned the assessors for an abatement of the 1936 taxes, which are $1,900 on assessed valuation of $52,400. Heretofore the tax has been paid by Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge who recently incorporated her property and made the South Mountain string quarter concerts free to ticket applicants. Each Sunday there is an overflow audience at the temple.

Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, who is the former Miss Harriett S. Pullman of Chicago, was a subscriber for two ringside parking places at the Lenox horse show. Miss Elonora R. Sears of Boston, an exhibitor, is her guest. Mrs. Schermerhorn also was accompanied to the show by Mrs. Chumasero McAvoy of the Hotel Ambassador East.

The tenth annual Pittsfield horse show is to be held Friday and Saturday at Holmesdale, the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Donald M. Weston, the former a brother of Mrs. Hale Holden, 1316 Astor street, Chicago. Holmesdale was so named for Oliver Wendel Holmes, the poet, who spent seven summers there from 1849. Near the horse show grounds is the famous Holmes' pine, a relic of the orginal forest, which by deed "Never shall be cut down or moved while it remains in a live or healthy condition."

Parisian Society Scattering to Summer Haunts

Strauses Give Tea for the Garden Club of America at Embassy.

By May Birkhead.

PARIS

Midsummer, always a good time to get out of a big city, finds Parisian society, including Americans, escaping to the beaches, the mountains, the châteaux, and the cure resorts.

Giving a château party recently were the duke and duchesse de Talleyrand [Anna Gould], who long have owned Le Marais, in the charming undulating country of the Seine-et-Oise, near Dourdan. Before the revolution, it was the property of Alexis de la Briche, introducer of ambassadors to Louis XVI., and executor of Marie Antionette's commands. Mme. de La Briche was a famous hostess there, even under the empire. The formal garden consists of an imposing rectangular stretch of water, surrounded with yews and dwarf trees, box clipped, where, for generations, many of the great figures of French society were wont to wander. Several years ago the Amateurs de Jardins, a French organization, visited this property as one of the most interesting of its kind within striking distance of the capital.

◆

The Duc de Talleyrand, who is a remarkable gourmet with an extraordinary knowledge of food and wines, has also a flair for installing a house with furniture of several epochs in a way to preserve its oldtime cachet. Yet Le Marais is conveniently equipped with many bathrooms, and a modern heating system. The way in which the objects of different periods are wrought into the general scheme, in the salons and the family apartments, as well as those reserved for guests, make the interior at once ornate and livable. The magnificent empire table in the grand salon is one of many examples of this.

The lover of superior old things is almost breathless before the specimens of toile de Jouy on the bedroom walls, while the pictures, the rugs, and the engravings complete an ensemble that can be called curiously felicitous.

◆

The Garden Club of America has been visiting French gardens during the last few weeks. We believe, however, that they did not take in Le Marais, perhaps because the chatelains were away, and they could not give their permission. At any rate, this organization, of which Mrs. Robert H. Fife is president, has been much entertained, both in Paris and in the châteaux, where they have had a chance to see many specimens of garden making, some of them most ancient. Ambassador and Mrs. Straus gave them a tea at the Embassy in the Avenue d' Iéna, and among those present were Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Randall Morgan, and Mrs. Leroy Clark, to mention only a few.

Marie C. Sullivan Leaves to Take Job in New York

MISS MARIE C. SULLIVAN, one of Chicago's able young business women, has accepted a position as director of the women's department of the Eastern Air Lines. She left Chicago on Thursday to take up residence in New York City. In assuming this work Miss Sullivan is a pioneer, for no aviation company heretofore has organized a woman's department. It is expected that this move on the part of the Eastern Air Lines will pave the way for women executives in the industry.

Miss Sullivan, born in St. Paul, Minn., spent seven years with the General Motors company as assistant to the executive vice president in charge of sales. After this experience she was engaged for seven and a half years in the hotel business in Chicago. Most of this time she worked as assistant to Frank Bering in charge of the women's department at the Hotel Sherman. In New York now she will have an office on the same floor of the General Motors building on which she started her career almost 15 years ago.

Filing Executives to Gather for Conference Here

Several hundred women file executives, representing industrial concerns in almost every state, will attend the sixth annual midwest filing conference, to be held July 31 and Aug. 1 at the Auditorium hotel.

MISS BERTHA WEEKS.
[Moffett Photo.]

"The Improvement of the Filing Department" will be the general theme of the conference. Miss Bertha Weeks, national authority on filing, will preside at the sessions.

Among the speakers will be J. N. Spencer, industrial engineer of Montgomery Ward & Co.; Miss Marguerite McClung, Mrs. Mabel King, Miss Elaine Tudor, and Mrs. Genevieve Van Benthusen, file supervisors, and Miss Ruth De Young, woman's editor of THE TRIBUNE.

Doris Bell Guest of Matters at Their Ephraim Home

EPHRAIM, WIS. Mrs. Thomas Lord, Evanston, opened her Ephraim home on the Green Bay shore last week-end. Her daughters, Miss Suzanne and Mrs. Robert Bentley of New York, are with her. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Rodgers of Evanston and their son, Marshall Jr., are occupying the Judge McEwan home for a month.

Miss Doris Bell of Chicago, daughter of Mrs. Tessa Bell, who is in England this summer, is spending a couple of weeks as the guest of Miss Janet Matter of Winnetka at the Matter's Ephraim home. Mrs. Bell is secretary to Sir William Craigie who was knighted by the late King George for his work as one of the editors of the Oxford dictionary. He is now with the University of Chicago, completing the Craigie dictionary of the American language.

This last week Mr. and Mrs. William Bernhard of Chicago and Ephraim entertained Mr. Bernhard's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Bernhard of New York and their 15 year old daughter, Helen. Helen has been participating in recent tennis tournaments and recently won several eastern championships in both girls' and women's classes. She will leave for Europe in October on a trip she gets for winning the New York girls' championship. She is considered one of the five best women tennis players in the country.

Mrs. Wheaton Augur of Chicago and her daughter, Margaret, arrived last week to spend the remainder of the season at the Thorp hotel in Fish Creek. They were accompanied to Fish Creek by another daughter, Mrs. Robert C. Orr, and Murray D. Augur.

James Weber Linn is another recent arrival at Thorp's. Mrs. Linn is still in Mexico, but will join Mr. Linn in Fish Creek about Aug. 1. Mr. William C. Park and Charles M. Newhall of Lake Forest spent last week-end at Fish Creek with Mr. Park's sister, Mrs. Philip Cruickshank of Decatur.

Mrs. Walter Bachrack of Hubbard Woods, Ill., is a Thorp guest while visiting her son at the Adventure Island camp. Fairbank Carpenter of Chicago visited his sister, Mrs. Thomas Marshall, last week-end. Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Heilman, Evanston, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Taylor and children, Glencoe, also are included in the Thorp guest list.

Cynic Scores Modern Girls as Sob Sisters

Says They Encourage the Unwelcome Advances of Which They Complain.

By Doris Blake.

HERE, girls, is one for you. You've had your turn throwing brick bats at the young men. Now it is their turn, with "Cynic" as spokesman for his brethren.

"Your article about disrespectful advances irking girls," writes Cynic, "aroused righteous wrath in me and a couple of other fellows.

"I am writing this letter purely because I think your sex, and especially the girl whose recent attack on our sex you quoted, have rapped the young men about long enough, and they should go unchallenged no longer.

"Cynic" Is Well Educated Young Man of 25.

"I am something over 25, a college graduate, and considered fair enough looking to get by. I have a good job for these times. I own and drive a pretty good car, which I have earned and paid for myself.

"During the years I was getting my education, I lived away from home. In fact, since I was 15, I've hardly known I had a home. I worked as I went through school. My people believe that character is best moulded in the contacts one gets outside of one's home environment, after the early seeds are planted. My present job is that of engineer in a factory. And now to answer the most recent attack on our sex, over which I am pretty much stirred up, as you may gather.

"I'm the young man with soul so dead, from associating with your modern girls, that I know I never need make advances to one of them to find out what she is. Just give her sufficient time, or rope, and she'll hang herself.

Describes Modern Girl as Weakling and Sob Sister.

"My opinion, formulated over a period of years in a variety of social settings, is that the modern girl is rather a weakling and a sob sister. Girls invite the sort of advances made to them, either knowingly or unknowingly, by their actions, or their shallow line of chatter.

"I haven't had a date for two months, simply because I'd rather spend my leisure time doing something better than squandering it in the company of the average girl of today. Understand, I am not saying every girl, for I am not cynical enough to believe that every girl is infected with the modern virus of whirl and go and the devil worry about where the money is coming from.

"Maybe I am classified as old-fashioned and none too ready with my pocketbook. But, believe me, I begrudge spending money on the type of girl who doesn't care how much she sets you back. I'll be generous enough with the girl I find nursing a sympathetic interest in a man's welfare and his money. Yes, I say 'money' again at the risk of being called stingy, which I'm not. I claim it is smart to hold out on the girls who conduct their cold blooded little racket of getting everything they can out of you, and then running home and telling of the insults to which they were subjected.

Says Average Girl Knows Nothing of Homemaking.

"I'm average. I like my fun. I like a good time as well as the next one, but if one ever expects to marry these days, he can't go playing the roustabout. Frankly, I detest girls who drink, and offer one the usual shallow minded and some times worse, conversational leads.

"The average girl today knows little or nothing of domestic science, sewing, making a home, or of being a true companion. Remember, I'm not expecting rare talent or angelic dispositions. I'm talking of average, ordinary ability which is good enough in which to start out housekeeping, granted the girl is willing to learn and to play her part honestly. Most girls frown on a domestic career as beneath them, or too limited for their questionable talents.

"May I suggest that the modern girl's problem may be solved only after she has taken a complete inventory of herself mentally and physically, discarded her false sense of values, and altered her outlook on life?"

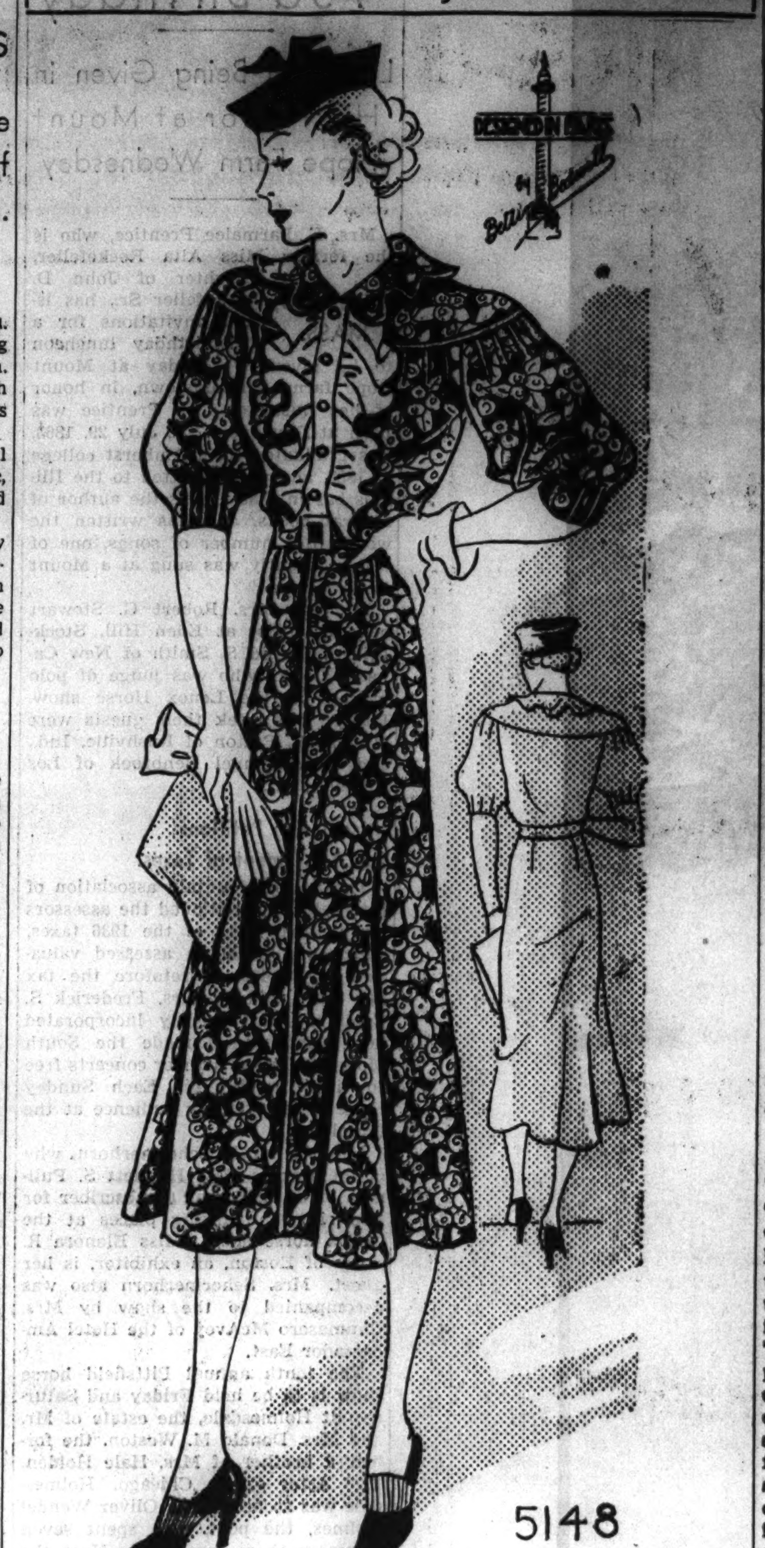
Paris Pattern Presents New Edition of the Jabot Dress



No. 5148—The Paris pattern for this dress is available in sizes 14 and 16, and in 36, 38, 40 and 42 inch bust measurements.

By Bettina Bedwell.

PARIS. — [Special.] — This Paris pattern brings you a new edition of the jabot dress that makes a delightful model to wear now and in September and October. It was designed by one of the great Paris dressmakers and made up in printed silk with the jabot, which buttons on the front of sheer white organdie. A second jabot in green organdie to match the green in the green and white of the print went with it. You might make yourself two jabots this way—one in a pretty color and one in white which can be changed at will.

Make the dress in a one-color material with the long sleeves if you want to wear it late in the fall, and have the jabot in any color that contrasts charmingly with the color of your dress, as well as a second jabot in white lingerie. Dark red will be very fashionable this fall. Have a pink jabot and one in white if you choose dark red for your dress.

Edward VIII. Sees His Guardsmen Without Beards

Ruler Said, "Shave Them Off, If You Like" and Upset Ancient Custom.

By Ann Whittingham.

LONDON. When King Edward VIII. held a reception recently for ambassadors and ministers at Saint James' palace, he saw for the first time how the yeomen of the guard look on parade without their beards. And he probably was disappointed.

One of the most revolutionary things the king has done was to release the yeomen of the guard from their compulsory beards. Orignally, back in the times when kings were frequently "taken for a ride," the king's bodyguard of the yeomen of the guard dressed exactly like the king and trimmed their beards like his so that a would be assassin had a chance of making a mistake. The custom held through centuries of bearded kings.

"Off with Beards," Says Clean Shaven King.

Now a clean shaven king has said in effect, "If you don't like your beards, shave them off." And some of them have done so. The result is a queer mixture of sixteenth and twentieth centuries. The tudor uniform needs a beard more than it needs a face.

The older guardsmen are against it and so are the beef eaters! A Gilbert and Sullivan opera erroneously placed the yeomen at the Tower of London, and we all have to unlearn that mistake. The fact that there is so little difference between them makes the difference especially important. Beef eaters grace the Tower of London in their well known picturesque tudor dress. They are constantly on duty there and are all clean shaven. Yeomen of the guard are all noncommissioned officers with fine records in past wars. They are selected by the war office for duty on ceremonial occasions only. They wear in addition to the beef eater garb, a gorgeous sash and a beard.

The King Gets a Beautiful New Car.

A beautiful straight eight car was delivered to Buckingham palace the other day and the king had a great deal to do with the specifications. It is a "state" car and, being part of the state equipment, bears the distinctive maroon coloring, and does not carry a number plate, but has the royal coat of arms in some conspicuous place. The king specified a number of ingenious inclosed cabinets to hold papers and an extraordinary lighting system by which he can do easily and comfortably a large amount of work while traveling.

The state cars form quite a separate category from the king's private cars. The private cars are an inconspicuous black, and bear a number. The license plate has three letters and three figures.

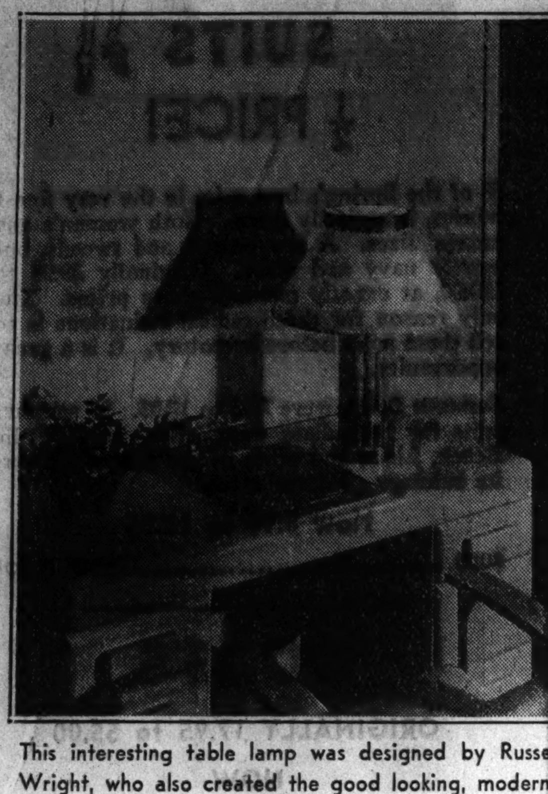
Accessories Important in Use of Modern Furniture

By Edith Weigle

IF you are one of the many who have gone in for modern furniture you know the selection of accessories, "the frosting on the cake," as it were, is extremely important. The decorative picture is spoiled if a conventional, period lamp is used on a frankly modern table or desk. On one of the charming new blond maple dressing tables a pair of dainty figurine lamps with frilly shades are likewise a jarring note.



This interesting table lamp was designed by Russel Wright, who also created the good looking, modern, blond maple desk on which it is shown. Both are available in a Chicago store.

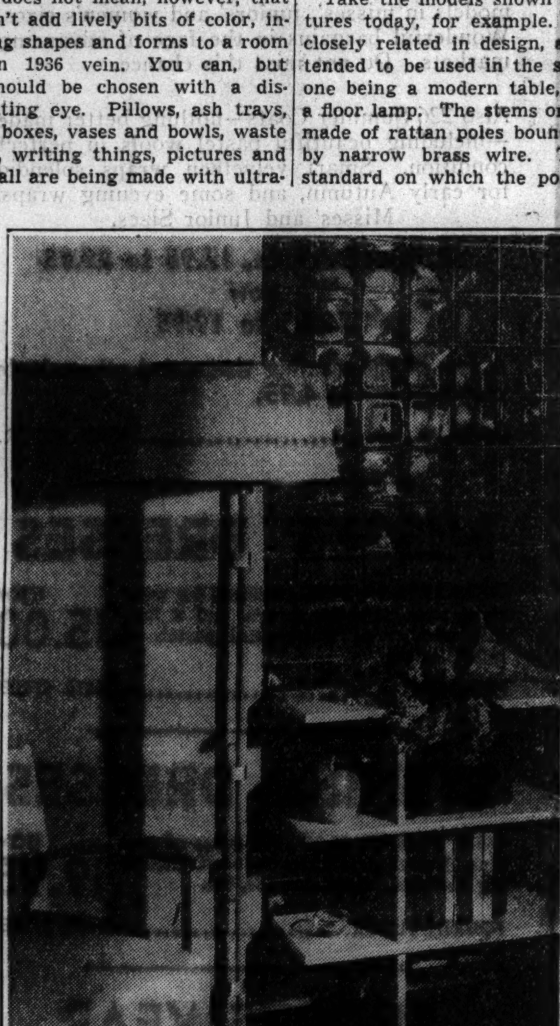
Fussy, highly decorative objects just don't mix with furniture of functional design.

This does not mean, however, that you can't add lively bits of color, interesting shapes and forms to a room done in 1936 vein. You can, but they should be chosen with a discriminating eye. Pillows, ash trays, cigaret boxes, vases and bowls, waste baskets, writing things, pictures and frames all are being made with ultramodern decorum in mind. The shops are showing excellent collections of them. No matter what your color scheme is you'll be sure to find among these items ones that will add the finishing touches, and the right ones, to your home.



Rattan poles bound together with brass wires form the supporting stem of this informal modern floor lamp designed by Russel Wright. The base is of spun brass. This metal also is used to edge the shade, which is made of bookbinding cloth. Sold in a Chicago store.

Lamps Created to Accent Informal Modern Pieces.

Russel Wright, one of the foremost American designers of modern furniture and accessories, recently has created a line of lamps especially planned to accent informal modern furniture. He calls them "informal modern" in contradiction to the sleek, hard chromium and glass functional type of modern that requires backgrounds of the extreme style. Unlike the modern of this latter classification, informal modern sometimes may be used with furnishings that are not strictly contemporary at all.

Models Shown Intended for Use in Same Room.

The most important characteristics of Mr. Wright's new lamps are texture and frank construction. Warmth is lent by texture, which is exaggerated and dramatized to substitute for surface decoration. A certain handicraft look results from this method and bald joints, the juxtaposition of planes and masses become important in themselves.

Take the models shown in the pictures today, for example. They are closely related in design, and are intended to be used in the same room, one being a modern table, the other a floor lamp. The stems or bases are made of rattan poles bound together by narrow brass wire. The lower standard on which the poles rest is of spun brass. The shades are of bookbinding cloth, a material that has an interesting texture, and are bound with narrow brass wire to match the windings on the bases.

The floor lamp is equipped to give both direct and indirect light. These unusually smart creations are sold in a large Chicago store.

Mr. Wright also designed the modern furniture in the pictures, which is of blond [bleached] maple and has been made at a price any one can afford. The various pieces are being sold in three Chicago stores.

"Beautiful Bedrooms," a booklet by Edith Weigle, describes three types of bedrooms: early American, colonial mahogany, and modern, and gives guides to their furnishing. Price, 3 cents by mail, 2 cents at the Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street and Tribune Tower lobby.

Pigeon Racing Is Poor Man's Sport in British Isles

LONDON

Perhaps one of the least advertised sports in England is pigeon racing. No one ever hears about it, there is nothing in the papers about it, and no one ever sees it. But in thousands of the little back yards facing the railway tracks, it is an active sport.

The only way one knows about it is by a little advertisement like this: "Pigeon. N.U.R.P. 35 A.W.F. 93 is at Vale cottage, Blackness lane, Keston, Kent," or "Pigeon. Miss P. D. Lowry, the Craig, Govilon, near Abergavenny, is caring for N.U.R.P. 82/35/99.

Racing pigeons is a poor man's sport, and unlike any other kind of racing it is the start that is thrilling. Pigeons from all parts of the island are sent in wicker crates to the starting point. They are stacked in tiers along a white line, and at a specific time one or two men go down the line breaking the seals and opening the doors. The birds stand a minute on the threshold, blinking at the sky, then they start off circling round and round. Having got their bearings, they fly off toward home in a ragged formation. The men close the crates, ship them off, and for them the race is over.

Some racing pigeons do as much as 400 miles.

Painter's Death Great Loss to Local Art Life

Frederick Poole Noted for His Water Colors and Still Life Compositions.

By Eleanor Jewett.

THE recent death of Frederick V. Poole is a distinct loss to the art life of Chicago. Mr. Poole was one of the best teachers of the Art institute staf, and his instruction, personality, humor, and ability meant much to thousands of students. He ranked high as an artist. His works were internationally exhibited, and brought him many honors.

Mr. Poole was assistant professor in the day school of the Chicago Art institute. He was an Englishman, and came to America from Southampton, England, in 1912. His affiliation with the Art institute began seven years later. His talent was diversified and he made a name for himself as a portrait, landscape, and figure painter, as well as an illustrator. His water colors will be long remembered, and his still life compositions are unique and beautifully rendered.

In England he was awarded the silver medal by the Hartley institute of Southampton, and the national gold medal. In 1923 Mr. Poole won the Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Logan medal and cash award at the Chicago Art institute for his beautiful "Flora." In 1928 his gorgeous "Lacquer," a painting with an oriental lavishness of exquisite detail, won him the Mr. and Mrs. Jule F. Brower prize at the institute. His water colors and oils have been shown at the Art institute since 1913. Abroad his pictures have hung in the Royal academy, the New English Art club, and the International Society of Painters, Sculptors, and Gravers, London.

Mr. Poole died of a heart attack, July 4, in his summer home at Bailey's Harbor, Wis.

Current Art Institute Shows Are Delightful.

The current summer exhibitions at the Art institute are commanding much attention. The galleries hold many delightful pictures. It seems rather a pity that no sculpture is included, for we have many sculptors in Chicago whose pieces well might grace these halls. Elizabeth Hazeltine, C. Warner Williams, Alice Littig Siems, Albin Polasek—the list could continue indefinitly with the names of those whose sculpture would be an asset.

This summer almost no controversial art is on view at the institute. While abstract modernism is rampant in various art centers, and puzzling psycopathic conceptions are flaunted before the public in London and New York, our Art institute has considered discretion the better part of valor and barred the super-odd from its walls. This action deprives one of ammunition for attack, diminishes the number of available topics of conversation and, on the whole, leaves one wishing that a few of those curiosities had been dished up. At least they would have proved more interesting than the posters now decking the first large gallery. There is something about posters [except those of the great war—many of them really were magnificent] that smacks of the commercial, and relegates them to the same class as labels and box-covers. They are on the outer fringe of art, barely entitled to more than a bowing acquaintance with it.

Weird Concoctions of Dali More Interesting.

How much gayer our mood would be if this room were devoted to the weird concoctions of Salvador Dali, for instance, who says about his own riddles: "The fact that I myself, at the moment of painting, do not understand my own pictures, does not mean that these pictures have no meaning. On the contrary, their meaning is so profound, complex, coherent, and involuntary that it escapes the most simple analysis of logical intuition." Make what you can of it. In the face of his painting it doubtless has a point. At all events, we are reminded of our modern artist who starts work with an absolutely vacant mind and blank canvas. If, at the end of a few hours' work, the result on the canvas looks like anything intelligible to the painter, he destroys it.

Robert Browning, the great poet, had more honesty of purpose, it would seem, from the story he tells on himself in the play, "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." Elizabeth Barrett speaks of a certain beautiful verse of his that puzzles her. Browning reads it over, and confesses: "When I wrote it, God and I knew what I intended; now only God knows."

The modernist painters do not go armed with God's companionship even in the first instance. They are whirled in the maelstrom.

But if there are no modern riddles in the summer shows, there is much excellent painting. One of the outstanding galleries is that hung with the portraits of George P. A. Healy. This is a room in which to spend many an odd hour. You would have to go far to find more brilliant and sounder painting.

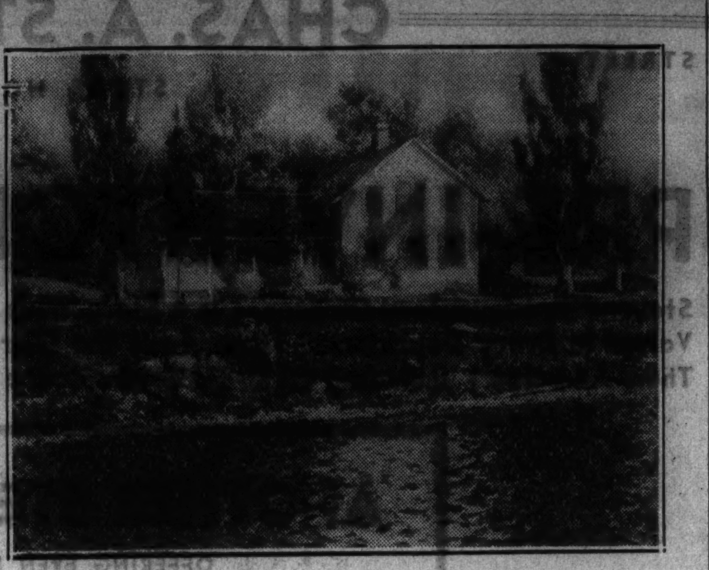
News of Interest to Lovers of Art.

The Van Gogh paintings, which will be shown at the Art institute from Aug. 26 to Sept. 23, now are at the William Rockhill Nelson Gallery of Art, Kansas City, Mo. From Kansas City the exhibit goes to Minneapolis and then Chicago.

The Art institute summer school in Chicago opened with an enrollment of nearly 400 students from twenty-eight states. The summer school of painting at Saugatuck, run jointly with the summer school of the Chicago Art institute, opened with the largest class it has enjoyed for many years. There are more than thirty students. Frederick F. Fursman is director. Francis Chapin is instructing in landscape and lithography, Edgar Rupprecht in figure painting, and Alvin Mayer in scultpure. The little gallery in the village is housing an excellent exhibit of paintings and works by Krehbiel, Hoerman, Thomas Tallmadge, Francis Chapin, Mr. Fursman, and Mr. Rupprecht.

The Allerton house gallery is showing oils and water colors by Paul W. Mannen, a Kansas artist, during July. Several of his "interiors" are charming.

The O'Brien galleries, 673 North Michigan avenue, are showing flower studies in water color by Louise Sinnott, a young Chicago artist, a pupil of the Art institute and of John Norton. The paintings are decorative and thoroughly delightful.



VICTORIA IN WISCONSIN

Poetry in words as well as in painting introduces one of Chicago's best known artists, Edgar Cameron. This delightful canvas is found in the shows current at the Art institute.

When Chicago Was Young

The Elegant Eighties

By Herma Clark

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend, Julie Boyd, of New York.

Chicago, August 1, 1887.

DEAR JULIA: We have been at Waukesha, Wis., the last week, seeking relief from the city's heat. Waukesha, a Saratoga of the west, has become quite fashionable, and people come from all over the country to drink the mineral water found there.

We stayed at the Fountain house, a hotel built by Mr. Matthew Laflin, a Chicago pioneer who has prospered well. A handsome old gentleman, now in his 80s, he spends a good deal of time at his hotel, and his children and grandchildren often are there with him. Will got him started on his early days, and we laughed over his reminiscences. He always begins: "When I started out in life, a dollar was as big as a cartwheel, and there were a hundred men after each one. My first year in business, selling powder or, rather, mostly trading powder for some other commodity, my wagon blew up, and both horses were killed. This put me in debt $800."

He first saw Chicago in 1837 and, becoming impressed with its future, he bought land on the prairie and built a three story frame building which he called the "Bull's Head hotel," and also barns, sheds, and cattle pens, thus establishing the first stockyards in Chicago.

Our beloved friend, Mrs. George H. Laflin [his daughter-in-law], whom you remember better as Mary Brewster of Pittsfield, Mass., was at the Fountain house while we were there, and we had a beautiful visit, talking of old times at Maplewood seminary. She looked most handsome in a dahlia colored silk, draped with a sort of thin black lace, which she wore to a "hop" given at the hotel. Her son, Louis Laflin, met his fate at the Fountain house, marrying, a year or two ago, Josephine Knowland, whose father, Mr. Frederick Knowland of Plainfield, N. J., had come there for his health and had brought his daughters with him. The young Louis Laflins are living in Plainfield now. I'm sorry they are not in Chicago, for they would be such an addition to the set to which Sandy and Martha belong.

"Long John" Wentworth was at the Fountain house during our stay, as was Dr. Florenz Ziegfeld, president of the Chicago Musical college.

Arthur Laflin, son of the George H. Laflins, was with his mother, and we also met a cousin, Luther Laflin Mills, one of Chicago's eloquent young lawyers.

Chicago looks particularly unattractive this summer. There's so much building and streets are torn up. If you try to drive anywhere, you find obstructions which make it almost impossible. I was complaining bitterly of it this evening, but Will said: "Yes, I know that teams unloading brick and sand stand across the street car tracks, that cars are delayed while teamsters empty their wagons, that frame houses go rumbling along busy streets, holding up trafic while they are moved from one part of the city to another, that sewer and paving construction make it hard to get downtown, but when I'm ready to tear my hair over these vexing delays, I remind myself that every torn up street, every sewer connection, every paving job, is an indication of the tremendous growth of Chicago."

I know he's right, but I wish I could see the fulfilment of the promise. With much love, your old friend,

MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

FOOTNOTES.

Matthew Laflin [1803-'97] was a typical Chicagoan of New England origin. His name is commemorated by the Matthew Laflin museum in Lincoln park.

Mention of Park row, in a recent letter in this column, has brought many letters from readers who recall that block, facing north, and overlooking Grant park [then called Lake park]. Mrs. E. W. Murray of Evanston remembers that it was a "real, old fashioned, neighborly block," and people took their fireworks out in the park on July Fourth and shared them.

An anonymous friend, writing from Gary, gives the names of citizens living in Park row in the late '60s and early '70s, as follows: No. 1, Enos Ayres; No. 2, Mr. Dexter; No. 3, Col. Shepard; No. 4, Marshall Field; No. 5, Robert Law; No. 6, William F. Coolbaugh.

McHenry, Ill., celebrates its 100th anniversary this week. Marie Agnes Foley, who is directing the pageant for the town, asks any descendants of the McHenry for whom it was named to call her at Delaware 7334.

OLD CHICAGO HARTHSTONES.

40 East Erie Street.

One of the most expensive houses ever built in Chicago, this gray stone mansion dates from 1883. Old timers think of it as the Samuel M. Nickerson house. Others, who knew it at a later date, call it the L. G. Fisher place. It was bought by a number of public spirited citizens and members of the American College of Surgeons as a home for this institution. S. M. Nickerson built it at a cost of $450,000.

The great entrance hall, about 18 feet by 52 feet, is of marble—floor, ceiling, and walls. The stair rail, of marble with beautifully carved alabaster open work, is magnificent. Those who love the Chicago of yesterday should be grateful that this handsome house was preserved and kept in such perfect condition.

We always are glad to hear of old Chicago houses still standing. Address Herma Clark, care Chicago Tribune.

this daintier way!

There are other satisfactory deodorants on the market. Ever-Dry's superiorities are little ones. But we believe them important enough to justify the $50,000 we paid for Ever-Dry's formula.

This formula is prepared with only the most costly ingredients. As a result, Ever-Dry checks perspiration instantly, effectively, and is particularly long lasting. Yet is so gentle it will not irritate the most sensitive skin.

The applicator of soft white wool is especially dainty and convenient. Note, too, Ever-Dry's quick-drying properties and its very delicate fresh clean fragrance.

Tests have shown that 88 out of 100 women who once try this nicer way, never go back to other methods. We believe you'll like it.

Good Housekeeping's seal of approval is on every bottle. 50c.

"I decided to look around and pick out a good late-model used car."

SAYS

CYRIL J. FIEDLER, Box 22, Willow Springs, Ill., who just traded in the old bus on a late model used car.

"THAT old buggy of mine was more than five years old and had gone plenty. Believe me, I sure punish a car, because every day I have to come in from Willow Springs, Illinois, to where I work at 4647 South Park avenue.

"The old bus did pretty good at that, but I figured there was such a thing as pushing your luck too far—with all the crack-ups you read about every day. So I thought I had better look around and pick out a good late-model used car.

Looks In Tribune

"I had bought the old car through the Tribune, and I got plenty out of it, so I looked in the Tribune want ads again.

"I read the ads a few times without seeing anything that struck me—until one day I spotted a 1935 Ford 4-door de luxe sedan.

"Now I know something about cars, because part of my job is keeping a truck running. I've worked a lot on cars, and I think I know a good one. I liked this Ford as soon as I saw it at the J. J. Wright Motor Co., 242 W. 55th street. Tires were good, the upholstery was good, and the car had gone only 11,000 miles.

"A Swell Car"

"Mr. Packard, the man who showed it to me, sort of shied away from that old bus of mine. But I left it with him and went for a ride in the new one. The engine on this Ford de luxe ticked off nice, and did it slide away at the green light!

"When I came back they were still holding a consultation over my old car. But they finally figured out an allowance that was better than I hoped for. I took the deal and haven't been sorry yet! There she is, sitting there at the curb. You can see for yourself it's a swell car!"

Admiral Byrd to Lecture at Bar Harbor Aug. 16

BAR HARBOR, ME. Among those who took part in the second weekly putting contest of the Kebo Valley club last Monday were E. Lee Jones and Miss Helen Jones of McLean, Va., and Chicago, who paired together in the mixed doubles event won by Dr. and Mrs. Fritz B. Talbot of Boston. The women's singles was won by Mrs. George Munson of Philadelphia, following a playoff with Miss Joy Hamilton of New York. Tea was served after the contests.

Much interest has been aroused here by the preliminary announcement that Admiral Richard E. Byrd, who had been in hiding before his recent visit with President Roosevelt during the latter's visit to Mount Desert Island, will give a lecture and a showing of his private films taken in Antarctica on Aug. 16 at the Criterion theater. The proceeds are to go to the Mount Desert biological laboratory, in which the admiral recently became interested. The laboratory has many prominent members, among whom are Louise De Koven Bowen and Frank R. Lillie of Chicago. E. Lee Jones and James F. Porter are associate members.

High among the favorite charities of the social colony here is the local chapter of the American Red Cross, in whose benefit members of the cottage colony will exhibit their estates on Aug. 2 and 9. Among those opening their gates to the public will be Miss Mildred McCormick, who is spending the summer at the Farm house, her High Brook road estate.

Other well known summer residences which will be opened include Sonogee, belonging to the A. Atwater Kents of Philadelphia; Brookend, which is being occupied this season by Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart; Kenarden lodge, summer home of Mrs. John T. Dorrance and her daughters of Philadelphia, and Byrne cottage where Mrs. James Byrne of New York is passing the summer.

Mrs. John Adams Chapman and her daughter, Miss Carolyn S. Chapman of Lake Forest, are at the Malvern where they expect to remain until Aug. 15.

A fashion show with debutant models will be a feature of the Long Pond club formal opening Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. Cobina Wright will give a song recital following the fashion parade, after which tea will be served. The following evening the Long Pond club will give a buffet supper-dance for the younger set in honor of Miss Cobina Wright, Mrs. Wright's daughter.

Mothers in French Town Honored for Big Families

FORTY mothers of the little village of Dougaville, in the Pas de Calais, which has only 550 inhabitants, have been decorated with the French medal honoring mothers of large families. One of the mothers has thirteen children, all of whom are married, and eighty grandchildren and great grandchildren. The decoration ceremony also was marked by the celebration of the golden wedding of five couples in the village.

Harbor Springs Season Is Now at Its Height

HARBOR SPRINGS, MICH. As some one here recently remarked, "I have never before seen so many people at Harbor Point." There is something doing all the time.

The Harbor Point clubhouse opened a cocktail lounge Tuesday, a pretty room whose windows overlook Little Traverse bay. If one prefers to sip in the open they may do so on the porch adjoining the lounge. Among those from Chicago seen one afternoon and evening were Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Grant, Mr. Edward P. Russell and his daughters, Mrs. Robert M. Curtis, and Mrs. Russell Christie; Mrs. Joseph E. Otis Jr., and Mrs. O'Neil Ryan.

Mrs. Lincoln Harris, who was staying at the clubhouse, has gone to Mackinac Island to meet Mr. Harris who was in the Mackinac boat race. They are expected to return soon. Joseph Nolan, who was also in the race, was seen lunching Wednesday with Mrs. Nolan and Miss Joanna Fortune at the Little Harbor club, where they are visiting. Teddy Russell, the son of Mrs. Robert M. Curtis, is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore Overbacker of Louisville and her two sons who have left on their yacht for a week's fishing in Georgian bay. Tomorrow Miss Helen Barkhausen, whose marriage takes place Aug. 1, will be given a luncheon by Mrs. Ralph McGean of Cleveland at the Little Harbor club. Miss Eleanor Talbot, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Talbot, and Miss Molly Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Hill, both of whom have cottages at Charlevoix, motored over for the dance at the Little Harbor club last Saturday.

Inquired a young lady, aged 9, at the desk during the children's dance at the club Tuesday, "Is the bar open?"

"Yes," replied the attendant.

"Well, I want an orangeade," she said.

Thereupon she was assured that she would be served in the lounge.

"Oh, no," she answered, "I want to drink my orangeade in the bar."

Copenhagen Society Entertains Welsh Coal Miners' Choir

LONDON The Welsh coal miners, who rank among England's unemployment problem No. 1, have several choirs, and one of them recently was the guest of a musical society in Copenhagen. It was the Rhonnda Valley choir, and they spent eight days being feasted because of their superb singing. An Englishman living in Copenhagen wrote back to London that they were nice boys but terribly undernourished, and that in their few days as visitors some gained as much as ten and twelve pounds.

All of which is just another proof of how little we know about the industrial conditions in some parts of England.

Dude Ranch Visitors Sleep in Blankets

IN SPITE of the fact that the most of the country has been suffering under a blazing sun, blankets at night are the order for vacation guests on the dude ranches of the Rockies and for visitors to the Yellowstone and Rainier National parks. In many instances ranch lodge fireplaces blaze merrily in the evening and early morning to ward off chill. Also, air conditioned trains now make it possible for tourists to make the trips to the mountain parks and ranches in comfort, irrespective of outside temperatures.

Sliding Down Mountain Side Madeira Treat

Travelers Slip and Skid Over 2½ Mile Course in Twenty Minutes.

By Frederic Babcock.

FUNCHAL, Madeira.—[Special.]—Last night the S. S. Paris was alive with Americans dancing to the epileptic jaz of today. Women in expensive frocks prattled to men in correct summer evening garb. Cigarets were lit and flung into the sea. There were iced cocktails. The music was the sad cacophony of modern civilization. Flirtation and darkness. A ripple of laughter.

This morning there was a dot in the blue distance. Slowly it took form as we watched from our cabin porthole. The speck became a cloud on the horizon, then grew clearer, and finally resolved itself into a mountain of green fields, splashed here and there by settlements of white cottages with red roofs. We had crossed the 2,769 nautical miles from New York to Madeira and were about to make our first stop on this summertime cruise to western Europe.

The land rose gradually from its extremities to a central peak. The houses crowded together behind the harbor before thinning out into white dots on the hillsides. Palm groves and vivid gardens appeared. A cloud was sitting atop the mountain.

Greeted by an Old and Familiar Plea.

"Allo, daddy," came a voice, "got a dime for a poor guy?"

We looked below. In our enthusiasm for the picture above and beyond we had failed to notice the scene gathering in the foreground. Brown boys in boats were swarming toward the liner, and we were brought back to earth and to the realization that, even as in the West Indies, and the South Sea Islands, and elsewhere throughout the tropics we couldn't escape the commercialism of the vendors and the divers.

But we weren't discouraged. Even the cries of "You like buy a Madeira chair?" and "How much you give?" and "Me dive; ten cents, please," couldn't spoil the effect as a whole.

Sunrise will transfigure a mudhole. Think what it will do to a place already beautiful. Here was Madeira, at rest on a rock in the sea, as if it had discovered a thoroughly satisfying view and found no reason for further effort. Here was a panorama that could well take front rank among those "ten greatest scenic spectacles of the world" that readers of THE TRIBUNE's travel pages have been writing about.

Go Through Funchal Riding on Sleds.

We went ashore and were taken through Funchal on bullock-drawn sleds that, we were told, were unlike those of any other city in the world. One of the passengers called them "ox-fords." We went to the station and were transported by rack and pinion railway up the mountainside to the Belle Monte hotel and its gardens of bird-of-paradise, bougainvillea, poinsettia, begonia, heliotrope, and fuchsia, and thence to Terreiro da Lucta, a sightly plateau overlooking city and harbor.

After that came what, as far as this travel is concerned, is one of the most unusual trips to be found anywhere. It was the toboggan slide down the mountain by carrinhos-do-monte.

Travel everywhere is an adventure. A trip to the nearest street corner at home has its points. If you're on the alert to see what will happen next you can find spice in almost anything. You get all the spice you want, and more, on your jaunt from Terreiro da Lucta to Funchal.

Slide Down Mountain Provides Real Thrill.

Two of us climbed into a woven wicker sled that didn't look any too sturdy. But the two natives who manned our carriage over the cobblestones were sturdy enough. They held us in check as we skidded and slithered down the winding slide. Otherwise we might have landed in some cottage kitchen in a little less than no time. The 2½ mile course was negotiated in about 20 minutes, but as far as thrills went we might as well have been flying over Chicagoland at 200 miles an hour.

The wooden runners of the baskets smoked and screamed as we bounced over the cobbles worn smooth by the trips of many tourists. The slide was built many years ago—perhaps even back in Roman times—and it may be an old story to travelers by this time. But it's one of those stories that never lose their tang.

Encounter Peasants on Way to Market.

On our way up the mountains we had encountered the peasants coming to market, slow walking, jolting, some atop the panniered burros, others on foot. A mother nursing her baby; another with four tots. Down from the hills they plod in clusters and alone. Black spots against the white road.

Siesta time had come over the island by the time we returned. We picked our way amid the heaps of humanity. Men lay like corpses along the road. A mother's lullaby reached us from a dark corner. Dogs sniffed at heaps of offal. Heat and smells, hunger and poverty, riches and crippling diseases—all were congested in this city of sleepers.

Already we were beginning to tire of this world of brown men with their appalling illiteracy, their eternal bickering and bargaining, and the fiery sun. We were entranced by the flower-spread countryside and the terraced vineyards, but we didn't care so much for manners and customs.

Tomorrow we would turn northward for other lands.

German Travel Cheaper.

It is reported that through the purchase of travel marks checks practically one-fourth can be saved over normal expenses for those who wish to visit Germany. The checks are issued by banks in the United States and at present are at rates considerably under the rates for German exchange [reichsmarks]. These checks are cashed through German banks. Also, German railway fares have been reduced about 60 per cent; all in all a worthwhile saving for the tourist.

GOING SOMEWHERE?

CURRENCY in the form of dollars or checks should be declared at the border by American travelers entering Poland in order that they may take out of the country whatever values they declare. This statement is issued by the Polish consul general's office in New York in order that tourists may suffer no annoyance.

"The only formality required by the recent currency regulations placed in effect in Poland," says the announcement, "is that the declaration must be made to the customs officials at the border. These officials will issue to the tourist a special certificate which enables him to take out of the country such currency or checks as he has declared." It also was stated that hereafter the declaration which the traveler must fill out will include the English language, in order that there shall be no misunderstanding.

The first of the WPA Wisconsin lake restoration projects has been completed and Slim lake, a former beauty spot in Washburn county, has been rejuvenated. Three more dams in northern Wisconsin soon will be finished. At the St. Croix in Douglas county, water is rising freely over the entire flowage area of more than 3,000 acres. When the water reaches its full height the new lake will be seven miles long and will contain 17 wooded islands. Two dams almost completed are on the Elk river in Price county and on the Court Oreilles river in Sawyer county. Eight additional dams are under construction in this region. In all there will be formed 16 new lakes which, as soon as the water reaches the proper level, will be stocked with fish by the state conservation department.

Thousands of foreign visitors are expected to attend the semi-annual international export fair in Prague in September. About 3,000 exhibitors take part. The fair, under the supervision of the Czechoslovak government, is the buying center for goods manufactured in the country and also presents a large number of exhibits of foreign enterprises. One group of visitors will be from the American-Czechoslovak Chamber of Commerce. It is scheduled to sail from New York on the Pilsudski on Aug. 22, arriving in Prague in time for the opening of the fair on Sept. 4. Tours also are planned to other industrial centers and to the famous Carlsbad spa.

One of the most popular diversions offered the visitor to Bermuda is sailing and, oddly enough, more women than men hire sailboats. A party of a dozen may rent a boat, with a licensed pilot, for a morning or afternoon for as little as $6. The pilots, most of whom are natives, are skilled yachtsmen, familiar with the coral reefs and the prevailing winds and currents. They will provide ice and water, build an open fire on some pleasant isle, serve luncheon and discuss life in general. The most popular sailing route is toward Somerset, the end of Bermuda's "fish-hook," gliding in and out among the 50 or more islands dotting the sound.

Rushing Fundy Tides Sight for Travelers

TOURISTS in Nova Scotia never fail to be impressed by the tremendous tides in the Bay of Fundy. Under exceptional conditions the tide has been known to rise 62 feet at the head of the bay, which is 145 miles long and 48 miles wide at the mouth.

Four times a day the waters change and ordinarily there is a 28 foot difference in levels. The receding tide leaves ships in the harbor stranded high and dry on the sands, their entire hulls exposed. Later the incoming waters set these fishing and sailing vessels afloat.

One of the favorite spots for watching the changing tides is near Digby, on a basin twenty miles long and ten miles wide which forms an arm of the Bay of Fundy.

Ten Boys and Ten Girls Start West on Trips They Won

TEN boys and ten girls, prize winners in the national "America First" contest sponsored by the Elgin National Watch company, gathered in Chicago last week to start on a trip to Glacier National park, Yellowstone, Pike's Peak, and Denver.

The tour, which was arranged by Raymond-Whitcomb, was awarded them for winning top places in a thirty word essay contest on the theme, "Why Americans Should Buy Things Made in America."

The boys and girls, who are of teen age, spent a day in Chicago before leaving on their trip. The boys set forth Monday night under the guardianship of Winslow P. Okeson, Big Brother leader in Evanston, and the girls on Wednesday under Mrs. Okeson's leadership.

Soviet Theater Festival Is to Last Ten Days

THE fourth soviet theater festival this year will last ten days, opening in Moscow Sept. 1 at the new Folk Art theater with a program of amateur art by workers and collective farmers. There will be a preponderance of soviet plays with the inclusion of presentations by the Ukrainian and Georgian theaters. The program includes "The Aristocrats," at the Vakhtangov theater; "Wit Works Woe," by Griboyedov, at the Meyerbold theater; a performance of the Georgian theater of Tiflis; several shows of various children's theaters; "Umka, the White Bear," the work of a young soviet playwright, and Tolstoi's "Resurrection," at the Moscow Art theater.

In Leningrad the last three days there will be a presentation of "And Quiet Flows the Don," by Dzerzhinsky; a performance by the Leningrad theater of "The Young Spectator" and "The Destruction of the Squadron," by Alexander Korneichuk.

The festival will close with "The Fountain of Bakhchisarai" at the Leningrad State Academic Theater of Opera and Ballet.

LISTS FAVORITE SPOTS.

Benton Harbor, Mich., July 20.—To the Travel Editor: Your column in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE interests me very much and I wish to list some of the beauty spots in our own America that appeal to me.

1. The lakes in the clouds in the Canadian Rockies, near Lake Louise. Both Mirror lake and Lake Agnes lie literally above the clouds.
2. The submarine gardens at Catalina Island. They are as beautiful as the ones at Capri, off the coast of Italy; a garden apparently laid out with great precision, beautifully landscaped.
3. Chicago's shore line at night, with myriad lights, as seen from a steamer, and Lake Michigan in all its phases.
4. The Royal Gorge in the Rocky mountains.
5. Blossom time in the Illinois Ozarks, when the vast orchards are a riot of pink and white, filling the countryside with fragrance.
6. The redwood forests in California.
7. Mount Ranier, the crowning glory of Washington's wonderland.
8. Michigan, with its 9,000 lakes; the long stretch of Lake Michigan shore clear to the straits—the state's Riviera.
9. New Orleans, one of the most interesting historical cities in the United States.
10. The Berkshire hills and the White mountains with their marvelous scenic beauty.

BEATRICE CRAWFORD.

SUGGESTS A POLL.

El Paso, Ill., July 18.—To the Travel Editor: Your Voice of the Traveler is extremely interesting to me and I never miss reading an issue. Why not conduct a poll of the ten most interesting places some time? May I give you ten outstanding scenes?

1. Niagara falls, especially when illuminated by the flood lights.
2. Old Faithful in Yellowstone park, with its accurately timed display.
3. View from Mount Loew, California, looking down on Los Angeles and its suburbs—day or night.
4. The Grand canyon of the Colorado.
5. Paris—from its cathedral down to the sidewalk cafés.
6. Genoa, Italy, and nearby Campo Santo.
7. Rome with St. Peter's and the Colosseum.
8. The canals and St. Mark's square in Venice.
9. The snow peaked Alps and the little villages which dot their sides.
10. London—Westminster and the old buildings, and do let me add trips down the Rhine and our own Hudson.

MRS. ROSE W. ROBINSON.

SEEKS A COMPANION.

Carthage, Ill., July 20.—To the Travel Editor: I have seen a good part of the world and now I am planning a trip around the globe to take place whenever the right time comes. I am a widow and travel alone considerably, but it gets lonesome after a while. I am wondering if there is some other woman in my predicament who would like to correspond with me with the intention of a world trip as soon as we can make arrangements. I have lived in Alaska, spent six months in the Scandinavian countries, have seen all of Europe, and have been in every state in our own country. The most magnificent thing I have seen in all my travels is the Grand canyon of the Colorado and one of the most colorful is Bryce canyon in Utah.

MRS. E. M., P. O. Box 72.

Bengal Tiger Loses Rank as Jungle King

CALCUTTA, India.—(AP)—The "royal" Bengal tiger is fast becoming the forgotten man of jungleland, and, according to official reports, grows more lean and gawky every year.

Government protection of the peasant's cattle has reduced the fattening diet of the big cats. The number of human victims in the province of Bengal has been cut to a fraction of its total 10 years ago.

"Indeed," says one old hunter, "the modern Bengal tiger cannot even lift a good-sized bull or cow, although 10 years ago he could tear through the jungle dragging a huge buffalo in his jaws."

Yankees Buy in Sweden.

STOCKHOLM.—(AP)—Permission to own real estate in Sweden was granted last year to 97 aliens, of whom the greatest number, 28, were from the United States.

TRIPS—VACATIONS THE TRIBUNE TRAVELERS' GUIDE TOURS—CRUISES

Rodeo Has Real Racing Thrill in South America

Tribune Writer Gives Graphic Description of a Contest in Argentina.

By Guy Murchie Jr.

THE great treeless pampas of Argentina was originally a rippling ocean of coarse grass whose feathery spikes reached a height of eight or nine feet. Today most of this virgin pampas grass is gone. Wheat, alfalfa, and hay take its place, and horizon-reaching fields are divided by the dusty wagon tracks that are the roads.

Farther to the west, the still unplowed country is used for cattle and sheep raising, except where it is too sandy and barren. Farmers are few here, and gauchos drive their herds from grazing ground to grazing ground, skirting the large saline areas and the rambling deserts fringed with thorn bushes.

South from Cordoba.

In one place, south of the central city of Cordoba, where a brackish stream winds through a vast cattle country interspersed with clumps of willows and an occasional grove of eucalyptus and poplar trees, there stands an estancia, its wide thatch dozing in the sun. Out of the surrounding poplars a windmill lifts its head, murmuring rustily. There is the tang of horse flesh about, of sweaty lether, of barnyard dust, and the thump of hoofs on the packed dirt.

At a place where the grass is much trampled east of the poplar grove, a crowd of gauchos with several dozen horses are gathered. Five canvas-topped wagons with wheels eight feet high are lined up along a sort of race course marked with stakes. Smoke from camp fires tumbles lazily into the air from bushes beyond the wagons, where fat women in palm leaf sombreros cook dinner of mutton and maté for their men. The men themselves are engaged in the favorite gaucho pastime of horse racing.

Impressing the Onlookers.

In worn lether vests and felt sombreros, and with baggy Turkish trousers tucked into their boots, they stand around jabbering excitedly. Some utter loud challenges from the backs of curvetting mounts, now and then hurling their weight backwards with a terrific yank on the reins and a dig with the spurs to pull the startled horse up on his haunches—thus to impress the onlookers. Others, more languid, lean on each other's shoulders or slouch against a chewing animal, sombrero pulled low to shade the eyes.

Here comes one, stamping jauntily from group to group in the crowd, waving two paper pesos in his hand. "Who will lay two pesos against my pony, Pedro? Who dares race my Pedro?"

His Challenge Is Accepted.

There is much talk in the crowd. Suddenly outsteps a young man in flannel shirt, evidently a farm hand. "I will, señor. My Antonio Gelasco will beat your Pedro, God willing. Señor, I accept your most kind offer—con mucho gusto."

"A compliment you pay me, señor," returns the challenger, sunshine glowing from his skinlike bronze, fire flashing from his eyes like night. "I am Urquiza Juan Chopanto. May I have your name, señor?"

"My name, señor," replies the young farmer with formal nod, "is Jesus Alessandro Bonando y Mando—at the service of God and yourself."

It's All Done Con Mucho Gusto.

"Now, señor, about that little affair of ours," urges Urquiza, pointing to the trampled course.

"As you wish," says Sandro, patting his sweating horse. "I will race you now—mucho gusto, señor."

"Bueno, bueno, my friend. Mil gracias, and I should like to put up ten pesos that my Pedro will win, if it pleases you."

"Bueno, señor, ten pesos is better than two," answers the farmer, "but why only ten? Pray, let us have a race, señor. With your kind permission I will lay fifty pesos on my Antonio Gelasco."

"Fifty pesos?"

"Fifty pesos?" echo the listeners, lifting their heads, some sauntering nearer. "Tiene mucha plata. He has lots of money."

Fire comes again to Urquiza's black eyes. Like most gauchos, he is a mixture of Spanish and Indian, with a dash of Italian. "Yes, I will take you on, señor. Fifty pesos—and the pleasure will be mine."

Jabber and excitement ripples through the crowd. "Fifty pesos—fifty pesos—mucha plata—Santa Maria—"

He Smiles Only with His Teeth.

The two contestants walk to the judge's stand, leading their glossy mounts and eyeing each other nervously. As the crowd surges toward the starting post, Urquiza's slanting upper lip curls back in a pearly smile. But his brown face in the sunshine and his beady black eyes do not smile. Only his teeth take part in this cool grin.

At the creaky box that forms the judge's stand the two gauchos hand in their crinkled wads of peso bills and amble to the eucalyptus tree that marks the start. A fat, straight haired Indian cop blows his horn to clear the track. A ten year old boy is dispatched to chase away a dog down near the third stake. At last all is ready. The two men mount. They line up beside the tree. The Indian raises his pistol.

There is a loud bang. Eight hoofs dig the hard packed sod. Four spurs strike deep. "They're off! They're off!"

Much Waving and Screaming.

The two horses dash down the opening straight stretch almost nose to nose. The men ride easily, crouching forward, their reins loose, their light sleeves flapping. When they reach the turn, the inside horse pulls into the van. Which one is it? It is Urquiza on Pedro. Rounding the turn, farther and farther into the lead he goes—two lengths, three lengths. Sandro to the rear waves his arms, screeching at his pony to move "faster, faster," but tired Antonio Gelasco cannot gain on flying Pedro.

Now they are at the half, both riders waving their arms and screaming as if to frighten their horses to the supreme effort. Is Antonio Gelasco gaining on Pedro? No, he has dropped almost four lengths behind. But now he seems to gain a little. The spectator gauchos are shouting and gaping in excitement.

Now the horses are on the last turn. They whiz by the stakes, running loose reined.

Suddenly Urquiza's foot hits a stake. Down goes the stick in the dust, and a second later Sandro thunders over it. Sandro is gaining now. Something seems the matter with Urquiza's foot. He is riding lopsided, holding on to one Turkish trouser leg with his left hand. Sandro is only two lengths behind.

The riders are in the stretch. One hundred yards to go. Onward pound the desperate horses, both riders swinging their arms and cursing at the tops of their lungs. Sandro gains steadily. Now the two are neck and neck. Now Sandro is leading—

They reach the finish line! Sandro wins.

The gasping horses slow to a walk. Turning, they come back to the judge's stand, led by their excited masters. Urquiza is limping noticeably. "Señor, señor, if it pleases you, we must race this race over again," he says to the judge.

A Question of Sportsmanship.

"Why do you say that, señor?" asks the dignified official.

"Because of that stake that fell down, señor. Please, señor, is it fair to race without stakes?"

"But you yourself knocked it down, my friend, as you went by," replies the judge.

"Yes, that is true, señor. You are right, señor," continues Urquiza with blazing eyes, "but this Sandro, he cut inside of where the stake had been. That is cheating, señor. That is—"

"No!" bursts out Sandro. "He tells a lie. I did not cheat, señor. I did not go inside the stake."

"Yes, you did," shouts Urquiza.

"No, señor, my Antonio Gelasco almost tripped on the stake. He stepped directly over it."

"Well, that is cheating," growls Urquiza, controling himself with an effort. "The stake rolled to the inside—off the track. If you stepped over it you were off the track, too." Turning to the judge, "It is no wonder, señor, that he gained on me by such tactics when I was injured in my foot."

"You are a liar. I did not cheat," shouts Sandro.

"Please, my friends," interrupts the patient judge, "give me the honor of settling this. It is too bad that Urquiza struck the stake, but it was not Sandro's fault he did. In my humble estimation, señor Sandro won the race. Here is the money, señor."

As Sandro takes the fat wad and stuffs it into his overall pants, Urquiza, looking blackly at him, mutters something under his breath and limps off with his steaming animal.

No more is said between the two all day. But Urquiza is in a sulky, smoldering mood. It is consistent with his gaucho temperament that he should not flare up while scheming secretly to make amends for the humiliation he has suffered.

At sundown the assembled horsemen depart with their wagons. The rodeo is over. Slowly homeward through the purple twilight walk the horses, snorting in air heavy with rising musk from the hot earth, while the wagons' greaseless axles whine their eerie tune.

Great Chef's Tomb Attracts Pilgrims

PROBABLY more persons than ever know something of good cooking. Many have a highly developed taste for the niceties of food. At any rate, France declares there is a generally increasing interest in the life and work of Auguste Escoffier, that famous man who was called the "chef of kings and the king of chefs." New members constantly are being added to the roster of the "Friends of Escoffier," connoisseurs devoted to eating and drinking as a fine art.

Escoffier, who died only last year after a long life, is buried in the cemetery of Villeneuve-Loubet, near Grasse on the Mediterranean coast. Before the city hall, in a garden, is a monument, surmounted by a bust of the great chef.

Canadian Park Has 1,869 Square Miles

OTTAWA, Ont.—Throughout the great interior plains which sweep across the continent from beyond the Arctic seas to the Canal Zone lie countless recreational areas of charm and appeal. Within this vast stretch of country none is more satisfying than Prince Albert National park in Saskatchewan, one of the newest links in the dominion's chain of national playgrounds.

The park is a region of rocks, woods, and waters which seem almost to have been formed by nature as a special playground for man. The white birch, the jack pine, and the white spruce grow here to unusual size and beauty. The innumerable lakes, rivers, and streams weave the whole region together into a jeweled network of continuous waterways for hundreds of miles.

In size the area is a generous one, comprising 1,869 square miles.

Norway Fjords Scenic Route to Hinterland

Tiny Farms and White, Red Roofed Cottages Dot Slopes of the Mountains.

By Edward Wilson.

BETWEEN Bergen and Oslo, Norway, not far north of their connecting railroad, is a spot that can be made an inexpensive side trip by the traveler in Scandinavia, and will reward him with a beautiful and full picture of hinterland Norwegian life.

The place is found by cruising through Sognefjord, one of the longest and most famous of Norway's magnificent, high walled fjords. Sognefjord, in this instance, is reached by boarding a small steamer at Gudvangen, in Naerofjord, which in turn is reached by a series of train, auto, and horse drawn vehicle rides.

Boarding the steamer at the Gudvangen docks one feels the boat is of good size, but the moment it leaves the confines of Naerofjord for the broad waters and huge gray walls of Sognefjord it seems to be a miniature boat in a land of giants.

Brings Realization of Strength of the People.

It is the same feeling of immense size and depth that gives one the gradual realization of the strength of the hinterland Norwegian people. Passing through Sognefjord the traveler sees verdant spots dotted with small, white, red roofed cottages. Backed away from the tiny houses are farms, just as small. And from these small green spots the Norwegians have for centuries forced a living.

High on the mountains one occasionally may see smaller patches of green. Gradually, as the boat swings nearer the shore line, it can be seen that the green patches above are connected with the farms below by wires that gleam in the sun. Fresh hay, tied in tight bundles, is lowered to the farms down on the slopes from the pastures high on the mountains. In the fields beside the houses long rows of parallel drying racks support rows of hay hung in the sun to dry.

The horses on the small farms and the horses that pull the little carriages to Gudvangen are like those of Bergen, short, stocky, and built for the hard work demanded of them.

And so the traveler cruises along and in the serenity of a typical Norwegian fjord observes the serenity of a hard working people who have had to cultivate every square rod of earth in order to live, in the midst of their granite mountains.

In Sweden, at Tylosand, on the west coast, where in olden times the proud vikings outfitted their open dragon ships, the seeker of viking relics can combine that pleasure with living in a modern, flourishing seaside resort. The resort is located at Halmstad, picturesque capital of Halland province, celebrated for smoked Halmstad salmon.

Drama and Concerts Staged in Open Air.

In Sweden, too, dramas and musical comedies, concerts, vaudeville and circus programs are being offered this summer in both large and small cities. They are staged in open air theaters and performed for the most part under the open sky.

The Swedes, who are fond of outdoor life, have developed their open air theaters into a national institution which annually draws thousands of eager visitors.

Summer headquarters for tennis are, as usual, established in Bastad, seaside resort in a southern province. Sponsored by the Bastad Lawn Tennis club, several international matches are to be played prior to Aug. 2.

ONE OF THE GOALS OF TRAVELERS TO THE LAND OF THE FJORDS

The village of Ulvik, in the Hardanger fjord, is one of the beauty spots encountered by tourists directly south of Bergen, Norway.

DETOURS

THE Adriatic and the Ægean seaboard and Dalmatia apparently are attracting more sightseers this season than ever before, with the penetration heavy to the villages of the interior. Popular resorts from which side trips are made are Split, Kortor, and Dubrovnik.

Americans are prone to think of the Adriatic as an Italian sea, but as a matter of fact it equally washes the shores of Jugo-Slavia. It stretches north from the Mediterranean for some 480 miles and the average distance between shores is about 100 miles. In the southern part it reaches a depth of 4,000 feet, shoaling off to 500 feet in the northern section. For centuries the Jugo-Slavian side has been known as "Nase More," while on the Italian side it is "Mare Nostrum." Off Dalmatia are the rocky cliffs of many islets. Everywhere are the sunbath resorts surrounded by the songbird world of Dalmatia, a continental nesting spot for migrating songsters.

The strange city of Okhrida stands on a high bluff rising from the shores of a beautiful lake. The older portions of the city have changed but little since medieval times. Little old houses with overhanging gardens seem to lean over and talk with one another.

A day's journey from the fashionable resorts are the mountain communities of Galichnik, known as the "villages of lonely women." When the Turks seized Serbia, the natives, skilled artisans, sought jobs in other countries. Branch employment offices were organized throughout Europe and Asia and, after 500 years, the men of the villages still go away each year to work in many lands. Once a year, in July, the men folk return from the world outside and the village festivities are the most novel rejoicings staged in the Balkans.

● The coming week-end promises to be one of festivity in Quebec when President Roosevelt will visit the old capital of the province. During this period many motorists are expected to drive southeast to visit St. Andrew, New Brunswick, the old loyalist town on the Maine border. Private cars are admitted to the province of Quebec without payment of any fee, the only necessity being that the tourist obtain a permit at the border. However, the car must be driven by its owner or a member of his family.

● For those desiring to visit South Africa there is the news that the American South African Line, Inc., has reached an arrangement with the trans-Atlantic lines and those plying between European and South African ports whereby a 10 per cent reduction on all advertised rates will be given passengers making a triangular trip from the United States to South Africa via Europe, either coming or going, the other side of the triangle being from the United States to South Africa or vice versa. Another triangular route for which reduced fares are being worked out is United States to South Africa via South America.

Canada Making Extra Efforts to Woo Tourists

CANADA is making special efforts this season to attract visitors from all parts of the country. Five day all-expense tours from eastern seaports have been arranged by the steamship lines and these will continue to Aug. 31. From Montreal there will be a river trip to Quebec where a motor journey will take travelers to the Shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre. On other days there will be picturesque river trips, sightseeing in Montreal and a glimpse of the Green Mountains in Vermont.

Quebec and the province have scheduled a long list of interesting sporting events for the summer. At Murray Bay there will be the tournaments and the Grand Mere Invitation series on Aug. 1. Quebec itself retains its French characteristics. The swaying caleche, a high two-wheeled horse drawn vehicle introduced by earlier settlers, still winds through city gates and under arches and along narrow cobble streets.

Church spires rise on every hand and date from the first missionary fathers. In the lower town, with its high roofed houses and fascinating little streets, is the historic church, Notre Dame des Victoires, commemorating a chapter of history which is intimately linked to the citadel, fortified walls and ramparts.

Washington, D.C., Girl Has Collected 200 Old Dolls

ONE of the largest private collections of dolls in the United States is owned by Miss Helen Thompson of Washington, D. C. Since 1929 she has collected upward of 200 of them. She has searched from one end of the country to the other to find the oldest and most representative dolls to make up her collection.

Drunken Cyclist Jailed.

LONDON.—(AP)—A man charged with "being drunk while in charge of a bicycle" was sentenced to a month's imprisonment at Southend-on-Sea.

Is a two weeks' vacation long enough for a complete sightseeing trip through Southern California? V. D. H.

Yes. By leaving Chicago Friday night the vacationist can have three week-ends, or sixteen days, less than four of which will be spent en route. In the twelve days at his disposal on the west coast he can cover all the scenic high spots and have a lot of time for recreation besides.

What British possessions are there in South America? A. S. G.

British Guiana is the sole possession.

Please tell me something about the lakes of Finland. L. P.

There are 60,000 of them, and they form glittering sheets of inland seas for the network of canals. The combined effect is that of a water world intersected by a landscape of unusual beauty. Little steamers skim back and forth all over the country. In the lakes are some 80,000 islands.

How long will the San Diego fair remain open?

Until Sept. 9.

What are the dates of the Dublin horse show? A. R.

Aug. 4 to 8.

What and where is the Devil's Tower? E. J. G.

It is situated in Crook county, northeastern Wyoming, and is probably unparalleled anywhere in the world as an example of columnar rock. It is composed of a rock similar to granite, but known as phonolite, because of the metallic sound obtained when a thin piece is struck. The structure stands 865 feet above the brilliantly colored foothill on which it appears to rest. The diameter at the base is close to 1,000 feet. The top, which has an approximate area of an acre and a half, is covered with sagebrush, ferns, mosses, and grass.

How long does it take to go from southern Sweden to Abisko, Lapland? R. J. R.

Under the new schedules adopted by the Swedish state railways, the trip from Malmo, in southernmost Sweden, now takes 30 hours, as compared with the 41 hours of a year ago. The journey from Stockholm to Abisko, a distance of 900 miles, takes 25½ hours.

How long does it take to tour Yellowstone Park? S. G.

The trip can be done in three days, but most visitors prefer to stay a week or longer.

When is the Guy Fawkes day celebration in England? B. B.

Nov. 5.

The Home of Panama Hats.

Ecuador's leading industry is the so-called Panama hat. So great is the demand that the manufacturers are never able to supply it.

No Wonder FISHING'S GOOD IN WISCONSIN

Wisconsin leads the world in fish propagation. MORE THAN HALF A BILLION fish were planted in Wisconsin lakes and streams in 1935. 7,000 well stocked lakes and 10,000 miles of trout streams in the state attract fishermen from all over the United States.

Whether you come for muskellunge, northern pike, wall-eyed pike, bass, trout or pan fish, you'll find not only wonderful fishing waters but plenty of fish.

And fishing is only one of many good reasons to come to Wisconsin this summer.

New Dangers for Baby. Critical days for your baby! Warm weather lowers his digestive capacities. No wonder mothers worry. So often even the finest strained vegetables, fruits and cereal may cause upsets!

Good News . . . Upsets Reduced! Now scientists find that Libby's special process makes Baby Foods far easier to digest than the most carefully sieved foods! Many babies go through the whole summer without a single upset.

A Head Start in Health! Babies actually get more nourishment from Libby's Baby Foods because they digest them more completely than strained foods. Extra nutriment means stronger bones, firmer muscles, better color!

Food Values Better Balanced. So much easier, now, to give baby a balanced diet. Each tin of Libby's Baby Foods contains three or more nourishing foods —each tin contains a better balance of vitamins and minerals.

Summer brings new worries ...but not to Mothers who feed these

Safer Baby Foods

Only Libby's EXTRA process "explodes" food cells in Baby Foods • Libby's special, exclusive process of Homogenization does what no sieving or straining can ever do. It "explodes" the tough-walled food cells in vegetables, fruits and cereal. Nutriment is released for easier, more complete digestion.

Food cell before Homogenization

Same cell after Homogenization

Ask your doctor when to start your baby on Libby's safer Baby Foods. Sold by grocers everywhere.

6 Special Combinations . . . to give baby a better balance of the vitamins and minerals he needs every day.

1. Peas, beets, asparagus tips
2. Tomatoes, pumpkin, string beans
3. Carrots, spinach, peas
4. Cereal . . . whole milk, whole wheat, soy bean flour
5. Prunes, pineapple juice, lemon juice
6. Soup . . . vegetables, chicken livers, barley

Libby's HOMOGENIZED* BABY FOODS

* An exclusive Libby process that for the first time completely breaks up cells, fibres and starch particles, and releases all the nutriment for easier digestion. U.S. Patent No. 2037029.

FREE . . . TO MOTHERS! Mail coupon today for this helpful new booklet, "Safer Feeding for Your Baby." Libby, McNeill & Libby, Dept. MO-7, Chicago.

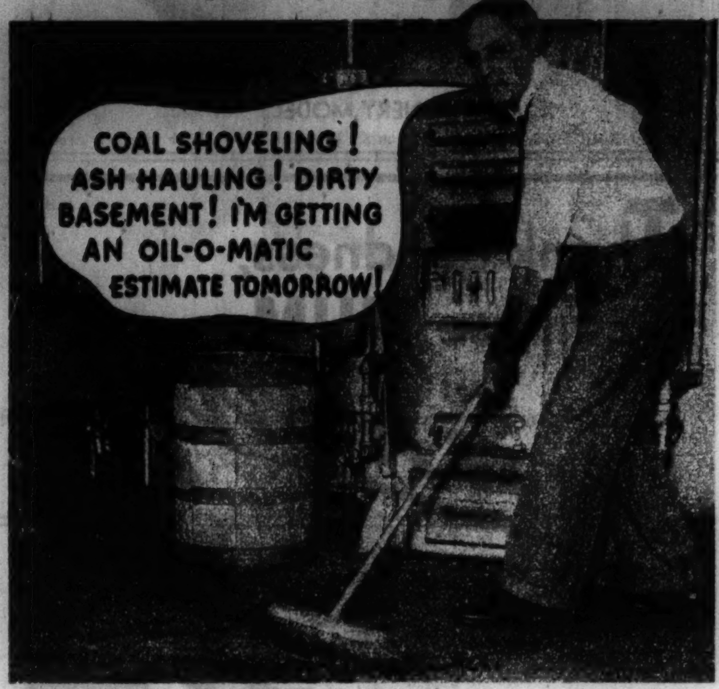
LOOK AT THEM ALL
AND YOU'LL BUY OIL-O-MATIC

The only oil burner that gives these amazing money-saving advantages



COAL SHOVELING! ASH HAULING! DIRTY BASEMENT! I'M GETTING AN OIL-O-MATIC ESTIMATE TOMORROW!

WILLIAMS Oil-O-Matic is the world's largest selling oil burner because it offers advantages that cut your fuel bills up to 25%!

You can't get this array of advantages in any other oil burner: (1) Low Pressure Atomization. A basic difference that means no wear, tear and waste from high pressure. No pin-point nozzle openings to dribble and clog. You burn the heavy, low-priced fuel oils. And you wring every drop of heat from them! (2) Oil Control. Oil-O-Matic's famous Metering Pump measures oil exactly no matter whether it's thick or thin. Contrast this with ordinary wasteful, hit-or-miss methods. (3) Air Control. Prevents heat-waste-up-the-chimney and smelly, sooty half burned oil . . . due to mixing too much or too little air with the oil as it burns. (4) Projected flame with no part of the mechanism inside the combustion chamber to be warped by heat. Insures long service without need for constant readjustments and repair.

Consider the fact that Oil-O-Matic now costs about half what it did five years ago. Then ask . . . can any other oil burner give me these money-saving features? Take advantage of Oil-O-Matic's Easy Summer Payment Plan by ordering now. Ask your dealer for a free heating estimate. Or mail the coupon below.

"Thank goodness, I can use MUM in a hurry!"

"THE thing I bless Mum for is that I can use it in a hurry. I'm a very busy person and have no time to waste. It's certainly a joy to be able to make this part of my toilet snappy and sure with Mum!"

. . .

Just half a minute—that's all you need to use Mum. A quick fingertipful under this arm, under that, and you're safe for all day long. As quickly and simply as that!

Another thing busy women like about Mum—if you forget to use it before you dress, just use it afterwards. For it's harmless to clothing.

It's soothing to the skin, too—so soothing you can shave your underarms and use Mum at once. Think of that!

Mum is sure and instant in effect. It prevents every trace of disagreeable body odor, without affecting the perspiration itself.

Is it any wonder busy women depend upon Mum? If you have not formed the daily Mum habit, why not start now? You'll be enthusiastic, too, about its quick, easy protection. Bristol-Myers, Inc., 630 Fifth Avenue, New York.
